Barley for Hogs.

After several years experience I am convinced that for growing pigs between the age of 2 to 6 months barley is preferable to corn if only one thing is fed. But to be able to feed barley profitably it must be finely ground and soaked at least six hours before it is given to the pigs. It should always be fed in the form of a very thick slop. Skim milk is preferable to water for making the slop, especially for young pigs. I once fed a lot of pigs 5 months old, and they made a gain of 23, pounds a day each on fine-ly ground barley fed as a very thick slop with a liberal quantity of skim milk. For very young pigs I prefer to feed equal parts of shorts and ground barley and then gradually change it to one-half each of corn and barley the last six weeks, when finishing for market.—
