CHESTER WILKINS KILLED

Literally Ground to Pieces Beneath the Car Wheels Near Ruckles.

Saturday evening at about 3 o'clock, Chester C. Wilkins, son of M. O. Wilkins, formerly of the McClellan hotel, in this city, fell from the tracks of a freight car near Ruckles station, while the train was going at full speed and was literally ground to pieces beneath the wheels, 12 or 15 cars having passed over his body. The train crew, Al. Morris, conductor, felt the train running over something and discovered that it was a man. Young Wilkins was last seen by his uncle, Jasper Wilkins, of this city, at about noon the day of his death, and was then in an intoxicated condition. He had no means and was beating his way on the road.

When the train stopped, a drunken tramp, who called himself Wilkins' partner, said he was riding on the rod behind him, when the grass and dirt began to fly in his eyes, he said he thought something was broke and put his head as close to the floor of the car as possible, and not until after the train stopped did he learn of his companion's fate. Section Foreman Jarger went to the scene of the accident, and he and others put the frightfully mangled fragments into a box and took them to Ruckles station, where a coroner's inquest was held by Coroner Hoover, and the remains were then brought to Roseburg by train.

The deceased was about 20 years of age and was married, his wife at present being in Portland. His father was in Roseburg at the time of the accident. His death under the circumstances, is a sad blow to his family, and their many warm friends in this city extend to them their sympathy. The interment was at 2 o'clock yesterday in the Masonic cemetery.

VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY.

Following is the verdict rendered by the coroner's jury:

We, the coroner's jury empanelled, find that the deceased, Chester C. Wilkins, came to his death from accidental falling from the north bound freight train on October 22, 1898, and there is no blame attached to anyone whatever.

Another Jail Break.

There is still a hoodoo on the Douglas county jail. Today at about 11:30 a prisoner named Brandt made good his escape and has not yet been apprehended. It seems that the door of the cage was left open while the hoodoo was being brought in, and Brandt came out and crawled on top of the cage. The door of the cage was locked with his outside, and he cut a bar in one of the windows facing toward the McClallen house, bent it to one side and crawled out. The crack he went through was but half over six inches wide. It is said that he went in the direction of Deer creek, but we have been unable to find the name of the party who saw him. Brandt was in jail for stealing a horse and other things in Coos county. Sheriff Stephens has gone in search of him with a posse. Douglas county could not keep prisoners if furnished with a penitentiary for the purpose.

SEVEN LOST THEIR LIVES

Frightful Accident on a Torpedo Boat Near Portland.

MEN SCALDED IN THE FIREROOM.

Tragic Result of the Trial Trip of the Davis—No Fault of the Contractors.

DRAD.

Charles Maseley, fireman, married.

Paul Luithe, fireman, unmarried.

Harry Wood married.

William Wood, foreman boiler shop, married.

James Ryan, married.

Axel Johnson, married.

Albert Duell, unmarried.

The bursting of one or more steam tubes in the forward boiler of the torpedo boat Davis while on her official trial trip yesterday fatally scalded seven firemen.

The accident occurred at 11:40 A. M. while the boat was westward bound, off Texas Hill, near Cathlamet. She had run one of the required two hours at full speed, and was making about 23 1/2 knots per hour, under a steam pressure of 250 pounds.

Until a careful examination of the boiler is made the precise nature of the accident cannot be learned, but enough is known to show that it was one of those mishaps which no man can foresee, and for which no one can justly be blamed.

CASE WITHOUT WARNING.

Seven firemen, under the direction of William Wood, foreman of the boiler shop of Wolf & Zwicker iron works, were working manfully to keep up the tremendous steam pressure necessary to supply the flying engine. Without a moment's warning, something inside the boiler gave way, and a withering blast of live steam, fire and smoke filled the cramped boiler-room and overpowered the helpless workmen. At the same time, the forward smokestack began to vomit forth flame and muddy water, and those on deck saw that something serious had happened below. Burrows, a fireman who was stationed at the tightly closed hatch of the boiler-room, threw the door open, and was thrown backward on the deck by a rush of scalding steam that seared his mustache and hair like red-hot irons.

HEROIC RESCUERS AT HAND.

At the same instant, Joseph Porter a machinist, and J. E. Wolff, vice-president of the contracting firm, sprang down the ladder and into the seething pit, regardless of the fearful heat that almost overcame them. Together they lifted Foreman Wood to the hatch, where a dozen pairs of hands were waiting to receive him. And then, one by one, six more horribly mutilated men were taken from the death trap. Several of the most severely injured walked unaided to the after cabin, where Dr. E. H. Thornton, the company's physician, who accompanied the boat, attended to them as rapidly as he was able to do so. Few were able to repress the groans that spoke of their terrible suffering, but all bore themselves with the fortitude that men in time of war call heroism. The appearance of that grim procession, as it filed along the narrow deck, is not to be described. It was a sight that no one on board will ever forget, and which none would see again for any price that could be paid.

Dr. Thornton set about the work of caring for the injured with coolness and judgment, which the strain of a long afternoon did not abate. Naval Constructor Spear, of the trial board, stood by his side through it all, removing the tattered clothing, ministering to the suffering men, as best he could, binding up their burns and washing the black from their faces.

Lieutenant-Commander F. J. Drake did splendid service, and, with such help as the rest of the crew could give, all the sufferers were placed on cushions in the after cabin and on deck, and the worst of their pain allayed with hypodermic injections of morphia. But they were past help. At 2:30 Maseley succumbed, followed by Luithe an hour later. Harry Wood expired just as a stretcher was laid to take him to a more suitable resting-place. The others died in the hospital at Astoria.
