What He Spends at the Bar.

"Do you see that man with the furding toward an elderly, well-dressed man who sat in one of the easy-chairs with an air of proprietorship which would lead anyone to suppose that he was a star guest.

"That's one of our regular customers He comes here every morning regularly and reads the papers and writes his letters. He is a rich man, and thinks nothing of spending one dollar at the bar, but he never buys a newspaper one gets up and leaves his paper or the chair, then he makes a dash for it and begins to read. But he is never so deeply interested that he misses other papers as they are left behind, and unless there are too many of his competitors on the spot he usually gets hree or four papers every morning." The clerk said that the same class of customers may be found in every large hotel. These men are good representatives of the class which is willing to pay one dollar to get something that is worth 50 cents for nothing.

These men are known to the hall boys and other hotel employes as "newsjectionable and bear any resemblance to the "bum" class they are not tolerated, but grabbers like the old, highly respectable man are allowed to grab whenever they can. "These people, continued the clerk, "mind their busi ness, and often spend 50 cents for drinks and cigars while they sit around waiting to grab five cents' worth of papers, and they advertise the house by sending hundreds of letters on our stationery. On the whole, the grabber is 7:30 Wednesday evening not an objectionable character, and he would be surprised to hear that anyone knew by what means he secured his
