COOK'S INLET COUNTRY

The Town of Homer And Surrounding Country.

IT IS THE HUNTER'S PARADISE

Bear, Moose, Caribou and Mountain Sheep Abound—Some Fake Mining Properties.

HOMER, Alaska, June 10, 1899.

Homer is, or was a boom town—a town on paper. It can hardly be called even that now. It was one of the many schemes inaugurated to catch suckers.

After going up Cook's Inlet about 25 or 30 miles there branches off to the northeast from the east side of the inlet, a bay or sound about 10 or 12 miles wide and about 40 miles long. On the north side of this bay or sound and near the center of it, in length, is a narrow spit or tongue of sand and gravel, about ¼ of a mile wide and about 4 miles long.

At no place is the surface of the ground more than a foot or eighteen inches above high tide, and in fact it is probable that an extremely high tide would wash over it at almost any point.

On both sides and back of this "spit" the waters of the bay wash a perpendicular bluff, perhaps 100 feet high, and cropping out of this bluff for miles on each side of the "spit" are three distinct veins of coal, ranging in thickness from 3 to 8 feet. Large quantities of this coal is washed out by the waves and is found scattered along the beach. This coal, however, has been proven by many thorough tests to be unfit for steaming purposes and of a poor quality for almost any purpose, although it does fairly well in a stove or grate.

This coal was of course well known to the Russians more than a hundred years ago, and was prospected and tested and abandoned by them many years ago. Since the transfer of this country to the United States, experts without number have examined the coal and made adverse reports in regard to it. The Southern Pacific Company, which yet burns wood on its Oregon and California lines, I am informed have spent a large amount of money to make a thorough test of the coal, and found it to be unfit for their purpose.

And yet every year sees one or two new companies formed for the development of these coal mines. In fact, the sale of this coal property, the title to which still remains in the government, appears to constitute the regular business of a gang of sharpers.

Since I have been here, and only a few days ago the last "run of suckers" put in an appearance with an outfit, consisting of provisions, machinery and supplies, valued at more than $100,000, and announced that they had purchased the mines and everything appertaining thereto, and that they expected to build wharfs, coal bunkers and railroads galore at Homer. In addition to the money which they have expended in the purchase of the coal mines from some person who never owned them, they have enroute for this place property in the shape of machinery and supplies, valued at more than $100,000. And all this without having made any reliable investigation or examination of the quality or extent of the coal fields, or the question of its transportation to a market.

It seems almost incredible that business men, as these men whom I have personally met and in regard to whose sanity there does not appear to be much doubt, should permit themselves to be drawn into such schemes.

As a town site Homer is the most desolate and unsuitable that could be imagined. It's only advantage being the fact that it shows up well on paper as an adjunct to the coal fields. It has not one single requisite for the location of a town. Every drop of drinking water must be brought in boats a distance of ten miles from the opposite side of the bay, and on account of the contrary and uncertain conditions of winds and tides it almost always requires two days for the water boats to make the trip.

There is not one single permanent resident on the town site. Not one person who will acknowledge that this is his home. In fact, the only persons here, prior to the arrival of the representatives of the coal company above referred to, consists of about 15 stranded prospectors and two or three hunters, who arrived from the East a short time ago and are making this their headquarters.

At Anchor Point, near here, is a gold mining proposition similar to these coal propositions, except that while there is plenty of coal here of a very poor quality, there is only a trace of gold at Anchor Point. And yet at Anchor Point hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended, and ship loads of valuable machinery unloaded for the purpose of working mines which have been thoroughly known and prospected for more than a hundred years and which the people of this country have known for that length of time to be of no value.

I could multiply instances without number, of which I am personally conversant, similar to those above mentioned, in which men have invested the savings of a life time, impoverished their families and broken up their homes in an insane desire to acquire sudden wealth, only to find on investigation that they had absolutely nothing to show for their sacrifices and that they had been made the victims of designing knaves.

And yet as long as there is a trace of gold at Anchor Point, as long as the coal measures crop out on Cook's Inlet, there will be found men to invest their money in schemes for developement. I am thoroughly persuaded of the truth of the saying that "a sucker is born every minute."

There is one thing, however, of which Homer has a right to boast, and that is the fact that there is to be found in the surrounding country the best hunting grounds in Alaska, and in the United States, especially if large game is sought. On the plateaus and in the valleys of the Kania Peninsular may be found herds of moose and caribou, and on the mountains and among glaciers are hundreds and even thousands of the bighorn or mountain sheep. Black and brown bears are abundant within ten or fifteen miles of Homer.

The brown bear of Alaska is the king of the forest. I have seen the skin of a brown bear which measured 13 feet in length, and the fur dealers tell of skins much larger.

At Homer I met Mr. Dall DeWeese, of Canon City, Colorado and Mr. Harry E. Lee, of Chicago; the former being noted as a hunter of big game. This is the third summer he has spent in this part of Alaska. During last summer he was in the employ of the Smithsonian Institute, engaged in gathering specimens of the animals and birds found here.

Mr. Lee was also here last summer hunting for his own pleasure, and found so much sport to his liking, that he has returned this summer for another season hunt. Mr. DeWeese succeeded last year in doing what has seldom if ever been accomplished before, in making a number of fine photographs of the bighorn sheep as they grazed on their native pastures. He also secured fine photographs of the moose and other wild animals alive and free, in the forests and on the mountains.

Both of these men returned early to these hunting grounds, for the purpose of hunting bear during the early part of the season, while the fur is at its prime, and they will remain until late in the fall, in order that they may kill the moose when his horns are at full size, and the bighorn sheep when the wool is in prime condition.

These men are accompanied by their wives, who expect to go with their husbands into the hunting grounds.

Moose and bear can be found within 5 or 10 miles of Homer, and the bighorn within 25 or 30 miles. While I have been here a young native, who has been out on two hunting trips lasting two or three days each, has killed 10 bears. Mr. DeWeese informed me that at one time, during last season's hunt, he counted, by the help of his fieldglass, over 500 sheep in sight at one time, and that there were no doubt as many more within the same distance hidden by the brush and rocks.

So far but little has been done to diminish the herds of big game, which abound in this part of Alaska.

There are but few white men here, and they are engaged in prospecting, and kill only such animals as they may desire for food. The natives of course hunt the bear for its skin, but they hunt almost entirely along the beach of the bays and inlets, going only where they can travel with their canoes, seldom going more than 4 or 5 miles inland. There is no market for either the moose or the sheep, and they hunt these animals only for their meat, saving the skins perhaps for their own use. It must not be understood, however, that the hunter who penetrates the haunts of the big game in this part of Alaska, will find a park or a meadow to hunt over. He must make up his mind to traverse as rough a combination of jungles, morass and mountains, as can be found in the United States.

But the game is here and it is well worth the expense of the journey to this point to find it and the hardships which must be encountered to kill it. I have not been out hunting, but I know the game is here. I have feasted for days on moose meat, (and found it better than it would have been, no doubt, had it not been for the fact that no other meat was to be had). I have seen 150 bear skins spread out in the sun at one time. I have seen sheep skins without number in the huts of the natives, where they are used for mats and beds, and in their bidarkas, where they are used to sit on while in the boat, and for bedding while in camp. So I know that the game is here for the killing.

If any of my friends in the United States would like to take a little hunt, if they will meet me here in the fall after my work for Uncle Sam is finished, I will guarantee to find the game for them, if they will agree to kill it.

I shall devote some future article to the fur business, past and present, at some time in the future and will close this article. I leave in a few days for Kodiak, going to Upper Cook's Inlet by the way. In my next article I will have something to say in regard to Cook's Inlet.

A Trip to Smith River.

Hay is good, gardens excellent.

Mr. Jones is busy putting up hay.

Mr. Trailer has just moved in from the valley.

Mr. Haney is working at the Hudson mills.

Mr. Coffin is clearing up and otherwise improving his ranch.

With an appreciative congregation we re-organized the Sunday School Thursday evening.

Guss Hall is rustling for more settlers who will help to make this beautiful valley blossom as the rose.

School is in session and making good progress under the efficient management of Miss Henrietta Tate.

Hardenbrook's logging camp is busy felling the mighty firs preparatory to the winter's run down the river.

Twenty-four miles from Drain to the lower settlement on Upper Smith river, so said the cyclometer on my bicycle when I visited that place last week.

Mr. Wilcox, Mr. Gunter and Mr. Worley have been stacking hay for Mr. H. H. Thomas, who, by the way, has two of the best Devonshire calves it has been the writer's good pleasure to see this year.

John Bolt, an early pioneer of Southern Oregon, died at his home on Applegate Saturday evening at 5 o'clock, after an illness of about a year, aged 62 years and 6 months. Mr. Bolt was a native of Glarus, Switzerland, and came to the coast in 1847, and to Josephine county, Oregon, in 1851. He engaged in the merchandise business for a while with Wm. Naucke at Kerbyville, and later formed a partnership with David Kendel which continued until 1862, when it was dissolved. A short time afterwards a partnership was formed with the late K. Kubli on Applegate, which was only dissolved 12 years ago. Since that time Mr. Bolt has been engaged in farming and developing mining properties.

NEARLY Fifty-eight Years Old ! ! !

It's a long life, but devotion to the true interests and prosperity of the American People has won for it new friends as the years rolled by and the original members of its family passed to their reward, and these admirers are loyal and steadfast today, with faith in its teachings, and confidence in the information which it brings to their homes and firesides.

As a natural consequence it enjoys in its old age all the vitality and vigor of its youth, strengthened and ripened by the experiences of over half a century.

It has lived on its merits, and on the cordial support of progressive Americans.

It is "The New-York Weekly Tribune," acknowledged the country over as the leading National Family Newspaper.

Recognizing its value to those who desire all the news of the State and Nation, the publisher of THE PLAINDEALER, (your own favorite home paper) has entered in to an alliance with "The New-York Weekly Tribune" which enables him to furnish both papers at the trifling cost of $1.75 per year.

Every farmer and villager owes to himself, to his family, and to the community in which he lives a cordial support of his local newspaper, as it works constantly and untiringly for his interests in every way, brings to his home all the news and happenings of his neighborhood, the doings of his friends, the condition and prospects for different crops, the prices in home markets, and, in fact, is a weekly visitor which should be found in every wide-awake, progressive family.
