WELCOME THE VOLUNTEERS.

When our gallant soldier boys arrive home Wednesday evening, Douglas county, and Roseburg in particular, will give them a most hearty and cordial welcome. These brave, loyal Oregonians left on a year ago at the call of their country and humanity. They have endured the many hardships and insipidities of camp, the monotony of two eight to ten miles marches in hot, crowded quarters aboard the transports over a wide range of ocean. They have carried the stars and stripes to a strange, far off land and amid volleys of shot and shell they have seen the banner of triumph float over many of the strongholds of the enemy. They have endured every hardship and felt every pang incident to a soldier's life, but the pang and disappointment of defeat.

The art of war has been learned and practiced in all its varied details except the one art of retreat, the proud nature of the Oregon knew no retreat. Amid the dews and awful charges and trenchments, fortifications and breast-works of flaming fire, thundering forth a deadly hail of shot, our boys fought on, and as the dawn of victory dawned the heroic din of battle, wondrous actions took up the echo which proclaimed the honors to the Oregon volunteers. Our brave boys honored Oregon. They have cast an indelible halo of glory over the name of our state. Let us not forget that in their homes coming they bear hearts that yearn to feel the thrill of hearty welcoming and a warm, fervent grasp of the hand. Let us show these returning heroes that we recognize and appreciate their gallant services to our country and atonement of them by our civility and the kindness of the welcome we give them.

Admiral Dewey has arrived at Naples and now Vesuvius is expected to do the proper thing.

Geary Post, G. A. R., Eugene is the banner post of the state. It has a membership of 144.

It is said that fifty cars are being built in the East for the Roseburg-Cool Bay railroad.—Random Recorder.

Three thousand miners are effected by the advance of 15 cents in the rate made at Elizabeth, W. Va. This is the kind of distressed news the country likes to hear.

Notwithstanding the stereotyped platitude of contemporary that it is "the great and only" advertising medium outside of Portland, the PLAIN DEALER'S advertising and job printing patronage is increasing daily and our subscription list is growing at a rate most gratifying and encouraging. Our many patrons express themselves as being greatly pleased with results obtained through this paper and office. If you don't think this is a good thing, we advise you to get a good thing when you see it, just cast a casual glance over our advertising columns.

Mrs. Binger Hermann Home.

Mrs. Binger Hermann, commissioner of the general land office, arrived in this city Sunday morning on her annual visit, in which she combines business with pleasure. Mr. Hermann is looking well and has recovered from his long (frequent) journey sufficiently to extend warm greetings to his host of admiring friends who call on him daily. In a pleasant visit to our office this morning he reported prosperously manifesting itself throughout the east and at various points along his journey westward. As to national questions he says the most important seems to be that concerning our policy in the Philippines. Mr. Hermann will join Governor Geer and staff tomorrow and accompany them to the state line to meet the Oregon volunteers and will return with them to this city. He next Saturday he contemplates going to Myrtle Point to visit his aged mother and other relatives and many friends.

Oklahoma's Big Harvest.

FAIRBANKS, Okla., July 28.—An era of prosperity has come to the farmers of Oklahoma. Of all the years the harvest this year will be the most bountiful. In the wheat section the yield per acre will be from twenty to thirty bushels and the yield for the whole territory will not be less than 39,000,000 bushels. The threshing has barely begun. The oat crop has been harvested, and the yield per acre was larger than any other year in the history of the territory. Some farmers report that they have harvested and threshed in some instances 120 bushels of oats to the acre. The corn crop of the territory is already made, and corn raisers from Missouri, Iowa, Kansas and Illinois look with amazement on Oklahoma corn yields. Eastern lands will certainly make from fifty to seventy-five bushels, and the plateau from forty to fifty bushels. The cotton crop is now made, and farmers have begun to market it. The crop is good. Pines, vegetable and other crops are good. The cotton counties are making good reports.

Another Strike.

William Angle, who struck a pocket last fall in his mine on Sterling mountain, from which he took out $3,000, struck another last week in the same mine, which bids fair to produce a greater quantity of the shining metal. We are pleased to say that good fortune can fall to no man more deservingly than Mr. Angle.—Medford Eve.

REPLY TO MR. ROBERTSON.

I have noticed an article in the Oregonian of the 12th, written by John P. Robertson, at one time a populist member of the board of trustees of the Oregon Soldiers Home, criticizing an official opinion rendered by Attorney General Blackburn, in which he, the attorney general holds that rules 12, 13 and 14 of the soldiers home are in conflict with the United States statutes and, therefore, void. As this article is misleading in its inference, untrue in its statement of facts, and slanderous in its criticisms of the members of the home, I feel justified in reviewing the article briefly. The rules referred to are those which will be remembered, which provide for the appropriation to the state of the pension money, or a part thereof, of the members who draw a pension. As my position in regard to the pension money and legality of these rules is well known, I have denounced them through the columns of this paper, and fought them in the courts. I shall not again refer to the phase of the question.

Passing over the popular mind by which it is attempted to create a false impression of the institution of its members by a comparison of the condition of the laboring men of Oregon with the inmates of the home, I desire to notice the statement that the courts of Iowa, Minnesota and Michigan, have already decided similar rules in conflict with the United States statutes. This statement is not only misleading, but in the main it is untrue. The fact is that in no state where there is a soldiers home, the trustees of the home, the commander or governing officer shall have charge of the pension money of the members, acting as a trustee for the fund, but retaining it to the pensioner when he leaves the home. These rules have been attacked in the courts of some of the states and have been upheld. The most glaring outrage in the whole article, however, is the statement that "after these rules were passed a case was made against the trustees, was tried at Roseburg, Judge Fuller on presiding, and he decided in favor of the legality of the rules." Now, as I mentioned every action that was ever brought in the state of Oregon, to test the legality of these rules, I am in a position to know the facts in regard thereto, which are as follows:

At the request of a number of the members of the Grand Army of the Republic in Roseburg and different parts of the state, as well as a number of members of the home, I instituted two actions against the commander of the home. The first action was brought in favor of Capt. G. J. who had been given a dishonorable discharge from the home for no other reason than his refusal to assign his quarterly pension check to the commander of the home for the alleged use of the state. This action was brought in the circuit court of Douglas county, Judge Fullerton presiding. The trustees of the home employed attorneys to defend the case, who filed a demurrer to my complaint. This demurrer was over-ruled by Judge Fullerton, he holding that the facts alleged in my complaint did constitute a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant. The case was then continued for the term. The second action was brought in the justice court in favor of a member of the home by the name of Aaron Nolte, to recover the sum of $24, the amount of a pension check belonging to him which had passed into the hands of the commander of the home under these rules, and by him retained. When Nolte, who was over 83 years of age, a cripple and destitute, a man of acknowledged exemplary habits, left the home, he demanded the money but it was refused. The case was tried in the justice court and a judgment rendered against the commander for the amount claimed. This case was, at the instigation of the trustees, appealed to the circuit court, where it was pending with the first mentioned case at the time the board passed a resolution rescinding the obnoxious rules, that Sam Robertson, who retained them, subject, however to the approval of the governor, as provided by law. As these actions were brought solely to test the legality of the rules, as soon as it was ascertained that the rules had been rescinded and that in the future no attempt would be made to appropriate any part of the pension money of the members, I dismissed both actions.

It will be seen from the above statement, that Statesman Robertson deliberately falsified the record when he stated that the courts of our own state had declared in favor of the legality of the rules, as every decision that was rendered by any court in the state of Oregon was against their legality. Nor does the opinion of Attorney General Blackburn stand alone, as his predecessor, Attorney General Idleman, also rendered an official opinion in which he held these rules to be contrary to the statutes of the United States. But the sentiment mostly to be condemned in the article referred to, and it embodies the reason generally assigned as an excuse for these rules, is that which charges the old soldier members of the home, as a class, with being drunken vagabonds, who spend their pension money in drunkenness and debauchery.

While it may be true that an occasional one has acquired an appetite for intoxicating liquors yet I deny most emphatically, and I have observed them closely for a number of years, that as a class the veterans of the civil war, whether in or out of a soldiers' home, are more addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor than is any equal number of men who have kept in the civil wars of life. This sentiment of criticism and fault-finding, this propensity of a certain class of men to disparage the honor and patriotism of these men, now that their ranks are becoming broken and their political influence lessened in contemptible in the extreme.

But these persons will now find that they have a new army of heroes to reckon with, and that the men who feel death in the clasp of a rifle and the trenches at Manila will make common cause with those who campaigned with Grant in the Wilderness and marched with Sherman from Atlanta to the Sea. It will be a sad day for our country, when the generosity of our people to the defenders of our country is to be a crowd of loafing fellows at the landing wharf at night, and shouting out: "Where's your hat?" "Where's your coat?" None of these questions seemed to me particularly funny at the time.

EIGHT HUNDRED STRONG

Second Oregon will arrive here Wednesday Evening.

GRAND OPEN-ARMED RECEPTION

Fine Reception Program Arranged. Splendid Supper will be Served. Company B will Remain Here.

Late telegrams received states that the Second Oregon, composed of about 800 men, will arrive in this city Wednesday evening, at nine o'clock, and will remain three hours. It is settled that the regiment will leave San Francisco Tuesday afternoon on their final homeward journey. With the G. A. R. members and veterans of all other wars, together with the home troops for an escort, the regiment will present a fine spectacle. The line of march headed by the band will be from the depot to the square or common between Jackson and Main streets, just south of the I. O. O. F. hall, which will be handsomely decorated and illuminated, and where tables and seats will be arranged and a grand banquet tendered the returning soldiers and accompanying family officials. A grand time is assured and all will unite in rejoicing with the boys on their safe return.

Amid the rejoicing of glad hearts, it will not be forgotten that there will be many sad ones also, on this occasion, and accordingly on the following Sunday, Aug. 13, memorial services will be conducted by the ministers of the city, at the opera house, in memory of the five brave boys from this county, who had down their lives since enlisting to serve their country.

THE LOST OAK.

A Little Experience on the Lower Umpqua.

(From the Oregonian.)

I remember a little fishing trip which I took once when I was living in Southern Oregon. I was pastor of a big circuit down on the Umpqua river, which represented all outdoors for over a hundred miles on every side. I was living at Scottsburg, up to which point the little steamer came.

Several miles below Scottsburg there was a little stream which put into the Umpqua river from the left, which was said to be very good fishing. I persuaded a young fellow about town to go with me and we determined to give it a fair trial for trout. The steamer went down by it every morning about the right time, and so we decided to go down on the steamer with a boat and row back whenever we should get tired of fishing. Everything went well going down; the steamer ran the few miles down current in fifteen or twenty minutes, and while the captain slowed up we slipped our boat off into the water, threw our lunch and fishing tackle into it, jumped in ourselves, and in a moment more were swinging up and down on the big swell made by the stern wheel.

We rowed around a little point which hid the mouth of the small creek where we were to fish, and then for half a mile or so up to the head of the little stream. Here the stream became full of boulders, and the water came splashing and plunging down a trout in a way that always makes a trout fisherman's blood tingle in his veins. It was a raw sort of a day, raining now and then in a sort of weebfoot drizzle, but we had rubber coats and rubber boots, and waded and fished without any reference to the weather. It was just the best sort of a day for trout, and the water was ideal for them, and yet we didn't get them. We had not fished very long before we made up our minds that somebody had played a huge joke on us in sending us to that stream for trout. Now and then we would see a big sucker living his lazy, indolent life at the bottom, but after fishing from half past seven o'clock till twelve, we had only three little trout to represent all our hard morning's work. But there is one good thing about fishing, especially about whipping a mountain stream for trout— you are sure to catch a glorious appetite, whether you get fish or not.

After lunch we fished uselessly down again to the boat, and concluded we would make our way home. It was very quiet up in the sheltered canyon where we were, but when we rowed out around the point into the Umpqua river we found that there was a tremendously stiff breeze blowing up the river, while the tide was going out. The young fellow that was with me lost his hat overboard, and releasing the oars a moment to get it, one of them slipped out of its place and floated down the tide. It did not occur to either of us at first that this was a serious accident, as it seemed a very easy thing to take the oar and paddle with the tide fast enough to overtake it. So it would have been easy if there had not been this stiff wind blowing. The floating oar gave no resistance to the wind, but swung along rapidly with the tide, but our rather large boat with the two of us in it caught the wind, and was as hard as we would, that our gain on us so fast that we soon saw it was useless trying to get it. Then we found ourselves in a very uncomfortable situation. We were several miles from home, and with wind and tide so evenly matched against each other it was hard work making any headway.

There were no houses along the river at that time, and no place where we could hope to get another oar nearer than home. We tried paddling, but soon saw that with that alone it would be midnight or more before we got home. Finally a happy thought struck me, and taking off my rubber coat I managed to fasten the oar up for a mast and tie the rubber coat to it, so that by holding it off to one side it served for a sail. It wasn't much of a sail, but it turned the tide for us, and a soon saw we were making headway up the stream. In this way, shivering and wet and disgusted, we floated home in three hours. Of course there was a crowd of loafing fellows at the landing wharf at night, and shouting out: "Where's your hat?" "Where's your coat?" None of these questions seemed to me particularly funny at the time.

An Astonishing But True Story

"My home is in Sidney, Ohio. I have been nearer death with consumption than any other living person in the world, and I want you to read this, so you can tell others. I took a severe cold and neglected it. I grew worse all the time, and at the end of two years I had run into consumption. I coughed terribly, lost flesh, could not sleep, and became so dreadfully weak that I had to take to bed. In the following eighteen months I gradually reached the last stages of consumption. No less than seven physicians treated me and all gave me up saying I was incurable. I was absolutely helpless. The whole family were themselves out caring for me. One day mother and sister came to my bedside, and said I had but a day or two more to live. Tears rolled down their cheeks as they sobbed the news. The doctors had declared I was in the last stage, and no human being could save me. I was willing to die, but before going to the cruel grave, I wanted to go out and see my dear beloved town of Sidney once more. They told me such a thing was impossible—that I would surely die before I got back. But I insisted, and to gratify my dying wish, a carriage was fitted up with a bed of pillows, and to this I was carried and slowly driven to the city. I got home more dead than alive. Through the mercy of Providence, someone brought a trial bottle of medicine said to be a consumption cure. No one imagined for an instant it was worth trying. But as a drowning person grasps at a straw, so I tried this medicine. I was better after taking two doses. Mother got more of the medicine and I took it, improving all the time. Today I am as well as any reader of this paper, and the medicine that cured me was Acker's English Remedy for Consumption. I declare before God and man that every word here printed is true."

This remarkable testimonial, on file in the office of Messrs. W. H. Alder & Co., New York, proprietors of Dr. Acker's Celebrated English Remedy, is vouched for by them, as well as by prominent druggists of Sidney, Ohio.

INDIANS REINFORCED.

Gating Guns to be Used on the Yaquis.

St. Louis, Aug. 3.—A special to the Globe-Democrat from Nogales, Ariz., says:

Two Gatling guns and a detachment of artillery soldiers from the City of Mexico, via El Paso, have been hurried southwest on route to the scene of the Yaqui war. The troops are being marched across the mountains from points in the state of Chihuahua and Durango to join the forces now there and other reinforcements are rushing in from all quarters.

It is reported that emissaries have been sent by the Yaqui leaders to ranches and mines all over the state of Sonora wherever men of the tribe are at work, calling them to arms with their companions already in the field, and many good things about fishing, especially about whipping a mountain stream for trout—you are sure to catch a glorious appetite, whether you get fish or not.

Even in this vicinity, 300 miles distant from the scene of hostilities, the Yaquis employed in various kinds of work are in a state of disquiet, quitting their employment and going away, and those coming here from outside points in Arizona, where there have been many Yaqui outbreaks, report the same condition of affairs.

They usually travel by night, and night small squads are reported passing through the town or along the road near by, all going in a southerly direction.

Some fears are expressed of a descent upon the town similar to that of August, 1896, when an attacking party took possession of the Mexican customs house in the early hours of the morning and were obliged only after a severe battle, in which they left nine men dead on the field and carried away some 20 wounded.

In that fight, company G, of the Arizona militia, participated, and it is from motives of revenge that the Yaquis now on the war-path have killed the Americans whose deaths have been reported. In the former wars they have always respected Americans, never molesting them.

The situation is considered so grave that Mayor Overton has forwarded to Governor Murphy a request to ask the war department to send troops of cavalry from Huachuca for protection of the town.

An eastern editor says that a man in New York got himself into trouble by marrying two wives. A western editor replies by saying his contemporary that a good many men in that section had done the same thing by marrying one. A northern editor retorts that he found trouble enough promising to marry, without going any further. A southern editor says a friend of his was bothered enough when simply found in company with another man's wife.
