OUR ALASKA LETTER.

Some hardships and Privations Encountered by Prospectors on Copper river and Cook's Inlet.

SITKA, Alaska, July 20, 1899

Having completed my official duties in western Alaska, I started on my return trip to southeastern Alaska, on July 6th, on the steamer Dora. Knowing what I do of the steamers plying along the west coast of Alaska, I should if it were possible to do so, delay a month before taking any other steamer than the Dora, at least as long as she is officered as she is.

The discomforts and even dangers of navigation on the Alaska coast are great enough at best, and a man is surely justified in lessoning them as much as possible. There is no more popular or efficient officer, or sailor on the Pacific coast, than is Capt. Oley Johansen of the steamer Dora. No more genial or obliging gentleman ever presided over a ship's destinies, than Capt. Johansen. He knows every sunken rock and sand bar, every shifting channel and projecting headland, between Juneau and Unalaska as thoroughly as the farmer knows the lanes and by-ways of his farm.

Another equally popular officer, is Mr. Fred Homer, purser of the Dora. He is thorough in his business and allows nothing to escape his vigilance which would add to the pleasure or comfort of the passengers who travel by his ship.

The weather during the entire voyage, was exceptionally pleasant. At Homer we took aboard Mr. Dall DeWeese and wife of Canon City, Colorado, whom I think I mentioned in a former letter, as coming to Homer for a hunt for big game. Mr. DeWeese was returning home sooner than he had expected on account of business matters which required his attention. He reported, however, having had a splendid time. Mrs. DeWeese was enthusiastic in her description of the trip and its enjoyments.

She made the journey from Homer to the head of the bay, up Sheep creek to the divide, then across to Cook's Inlet. In making this journey Mrs. DeWeese passed over a country never before, in all probability, traversed by a white woman and one which has been claimed by many to be absolutely impenetrable by a woman. In making the journey up Sheep creek she pressed over the route described by Mr. Harry E. Lee, in his hunting trip in 1898, the account of which was published in a number of the leading sportsmens papers and magazines.

It describes the river as being filled with dangerous rapids which are almost unsurmountable, the very recital of which fills one with admiration for the courage and endurance displayed by him in accomplishing a feat, which he states in his articles, was never before undertaken by a white man, and which he declares the natives entreated him almost with tears in their eyes not to undertake.

And yet this little woman followed her husband over the route, and modestly disclaimed any credit for bravery or endurance, declaring the experience to have been fraught with more real pleasure than she ever before experienced from an outing, although she has made many journeys with her husband through the mountains of Colorado. The fact is that while a journey of this kind is quite an undertaking for a woman, yet Lee's description of the trip sounds ridiculous to a man who knows anything about the route traversed. While on the trip Mrs. DeWeese killed a black bear and two splendid specimens of the Bighorn sheep, one of which had as fine a pair of horns as I ever saw. I doubt very much if any other woman has ever shot a Bighorn in his native haunts among the mountain peaks, above the line of everlasting snow.

The voyage down was without special event, the weather during the entire voyage was exceptionally pleasant. We had quite a large passenger list composed largely of prospectors returning from Cooks Inlet and the Copper river country.

Of about 75 or 80 returning prospectors, all but 8 or 10 traveled second class, and a number worked their passage down. Of the number, 50 or more came out of the Copper river country, and the tales which they had to relate of disappointment, privation and sickness was heart rending. From Cook's Inlet came one man with a broken arm, both bones of the upper arm having been shattered some six weeks previously, during which time the arm had not been dressed by a physician or other competent person. He was without money or friends in the country except the chance acquaintance of an hour. He was attempting to get to a hospital where his injuries could be treated.

At Orca, on Prince Williams sound, a man was carried on board, whose suffering and endurance of hardships, was almost incredible. While prospecting with some companions somewhere in the interior, near the head waters of the Copper river, a stone rolling down the mountain crushed his thigh bone. His companions carried him 45 miles on a rude litter, through an almost impenetrable wilderness of mountains, fallen timber and glaciers.

It required 10 days to reach the Copper river, a distance of 45 miles, it having been necessary to cut a trail almost the entire distance, through the jungle. After reaching the Copper river, a boat was procured in which the party descended the river to the sea, a distance of 185 miles, through a course which perhaps has no equal on the continent for treacherous whirlpools and rapids.

With a party which came aboard at Valdes, was a noble St. Bernard dog which was found standing guard over the dead bodies of 5 men, who perished with the cold on one of the Copper river glacers. For 5 days and nights he had kept his solitary vigil without food or drink.

There is another dog on the steamer, which was taken from off a part of a wrecked vessel which went to pieces at some point along the coast.

Old Wreck, as the dog has been named, has become attached to the ship and crew and has made many voyages along the Alaska coast. Near Orca on the trip down we picked up an open boat containing a prospector who had drifted out to sea from Cooks inlet. For four or five days and nights he had drifted on the open sea with no food except a few dried apples, and little or no water. He had been compelled to keep awake and row his boat against the waves to keep her from filling with water and foundering. He was completely exhausted, his hands being raw and bloody from rowing the boat. He had spent a year or two prospecting around Cooks inlet and this was the end of it. He had spent his time and money and had nothing to show for it but ruined prospects and blasted hopes. When we reached Juneau he proceeded to a hotel and blew his brains out with a revolver. And so I might multiply incidents without number, which have come under my own observation.

I reached Sitka on July 15th after a voyage lasting nine days and after having been absent just two months. I am glad to be back, although I have had a very interesting and instructive experience. In addition to having done the work assigned me by the government satisfactorily to myself and in a manner to gain the personal commendation of my superior in office, I have gathered a vast amount of information in regard to this remote part of Uncle Sam's dominions, which, although it may not be of any practical value to me, will afford me considerable satisfaction. I have traveled in all kinds of crafts, in steamships and sailing vessels, in rowboats and sailboats, in canoes and bidarkas. I have lived on the fat of the land, when I could get the fat, and when I could not get that I took the lean. Sometimes it has been a feast and at other times it has been the othet thing—bacon and beans—without the bacon, and coffee without either sugar or cream, and yet I have not been sick an hour or experienced any real hardship. However, I do not care to repeat the experience—not this summer.

And yet as I said before it has been a wonderful experience. It is surprising the people one meets here. During the past three months I have met and talked with men from every quarter of the globe. Men from every state in the Union. Men from every city of importance in the country. Men in every walk of life. Men in every profession and business under the sun—United States senators, members of congress, governors of states, professors of colleges, presidents of railroads, Tom, Dick and Harry, and all the balance of the boys from everywhere have been in Alaska, during the summer. If you want to learn the news, come to Alaska. If you want to get in touch with the political world, the business world, come to Alaska.

A man says I am from Washington, from New York, from Chicago, from St. Louis, from New Orleans, from San Francisco, from Maine, from Texas, from everywhere.

I say I am from Roseburg, Oregon. He says, oh yes; home of Binger Hermann, commissioner of the general land office. Mighty good man. Knew him in congress. Met him last month.

This makes me proud of my home in Oregon and proud of Oregon's favorite son, Hon. Binger Hermann.

Last Tuesday evening the Boswell hall was brilliantly lighted. The room was richly decorated with flags and bunting. The occasion was a reception tendered to Miss Rena Pallady, of Boswell Springs. At about the hour of 8 p. m. the people of Drain and Yoncalla began to assemble, all intent on making the evening a pleasant one. At 8:30 o'clock a piano duet by Mrs. Low and Miss Gertie Johnson was announced. This was followed with a recitation by the guest of honor, Miss Rena Pallady. The program consisted of instrumental and vocal music, recitations and tableaux. All parts of the program were well rendered with unusual ease and grace.

There is considerable activity in timber lands in the Jenny creek section, says the Ashland Tidings. Some transfers have already been made and more are on the tapis. A Michigan lumber company has representatives in that section who have purchased or secured options on about 300 acres recently, the price offered being about $2000 per claim of 160 acres. Representatives of an Ohio company have also recently been looking over the extensive Hopkins timber land holdings in that section, which amount to about 40,000 acres, with a view to purchasing. It is understood that Hopkins asks a round $1,000,000 for his lands.
