The First Leaf of Autumn.

I stood in the woo 's one evening, be prepared by a committee appointed In the early autumn time; The birds around me were singing Their early evening chime;

All nature seemed her purest, The winds, the birds, the trees, attack of la grippe, but, it is to be hoped, The brook that babbled gayly, The mellow evening breeze, These were the charms that awed me,

The noblest of the land, As I tood with the world surrounding, But with God on every hand; silently thought o' the autumn, And, the leaves, how they must fall

And, the birds, how they must answer Dame Nature's yearly call. When, in proof of my forebodings. An omer, slight yet strong, heard a gentle rustle

A scarce discerned flutter My listening ear did greet, And the first bright leaf of autumn, Lay silent at my feet. As a weary soul that labors

As the breezes moved along,

Seeks rest when day is done. So lay the leaf before me In the pleasant evening sun, Her coat not tinged with scarlet Nor red of autumn's bue, Yet I knew that Time had whisp red

"Thy work on earth is through." lifted the silent stranger, And pressed her to my breast; Thou art the first of many To come more gayly dressed" said as I foudly kissed Ler,

Down on the velvet carpet Spread within God's door. There on a lawn like volvet Tue little pilgrim lay, Waiting for more companions, Awart ug the close of day,

Then let her fall once more

And I thought of the golden circle. M dintained by Nature's hand; Raising a leafy harvest. To again enrich the land. As I looked on the leaf I started

As a sleeper from a dream.

And the thought I ne'er had mastered Was now too plainly seen; could see the Crestor's model In Life's infinite scheme. We are as the leaves of a harvest-to replenish the earth again, This pale young leaf, that's fallen, Was followed by a score; The autumn winds then gathered, And down to the earth they bore he leaves, that still did linger, Nor did they stop till then

As a gentle and fond 'amen.' And I thought of the harvest gathered By God of human souls: And of how we laid them sadly Beneath their earthly knolle; And the flowers so gently gathered,

They'd covered the heaps with snow

the Geary Law is Wrong in Latest advices from Washington say the fact has developed within the last few weeks that practically every officer of the Government who has anything to do with the administrator of the Chinese exclusion law believes that it is ineffective in its operation, and that the st.tue which forbids Chinese laborers to enter the country should not be renewed when it expires by limitation early next May. S cretary Gage and all the chi-f officers of the Treasury Depa tment, with the exception of Powderly, Commissioner-General of Immigration, believ - that it is wrong in principle, that it is ineff ctive in operation, and that the general commercial interes's of the United States demand that it should not be renewed by Congress. So pronounced is this feeling that it was thought at one time hat Secretary Gage would recommend in plain terms in his annual rejothat the law or not re-enacted. Friends of the law have been so active, imwever, and opposition on the Pacific Coast to the free immigration of Chinese on an quality with other foreigners has be-n manifested in so pronounced a way that it is doubtful if Secretary Gage or any officer of the Government will come our quarely in favor of the repea of the
