O, glorione, beautions world of tife below, But tell me, child of heaven, dost thou know Aught of thy birth, however cam'et thou here In Nature's universe, thou wondrous sphere? Ten thousands leagues my mind doth seem to soal Far o'er thy rounded form, from shore to shore, To view, to feel, to drink thine artful grace,

And catch one burried glance at thy whole face. A million times a million feet I hear, While treading on thy side, thro' atmosphere Which thou hast breathed from out thy gracious breast, That all may live with thee and share thy reet. Thy bounteons stores feed every hungry mouth; Thy floods of waters drink away all drouth ; And givest thee from off thine own great form Reflected rays, all living things to warm.

Thou dost clothe thyrell in rich garments bright, That man, beholding thee, may view thy sight With approbation, and contented be, That he's the child of thy sweet charity. O, peaceful Earth, below, so calm, so sweet, But give me power to write, and I'll repeat To brother man the sacred thoughts I feel This hour, yea, in truth to all reveal Thy gen'rous motherhood to helpless men, And strive to teach each one to comprehend The blessings that thou has to kindly give To every one that on thy bosom lives. I'd tell of seas, engireling thee around, Upon whose breasts ten thousand ships are found, How scenic rivers, clear and deep and wide, Like happy children, play on every side; Of mountain realms, whose glistening, snowy peaks, Are but a chain of pearle to grace thy neck; And giant woods, thro' which thy pure breath blows, Are but as tiny grass, where water flows; Of cities, thronged with works of living art, Where millions feel the beatings of thy heart, And treasures, far more priceless yet than gold, That in thy bosom then doest amply hold.

I'd write of that proud journey round the sun, Fall thirty billion miles of space to run, And bending that great head, with charming grace, To give four beauteous s asons on thy face; Yet never wand'ring from that chosen ract, Nor for one moment, s'er thy speed to sinck ; How turnest thou for e'er to east from west, Providing time for labor and for rest. I stand, entranced, great form, to gaze on thee, My soul is filled with thy sublimity.

I pause, altho' I summon all my might, My pen doth fall; I can no further write, Roseburg, Ore., Dec. 18, 1901, ORYER L. MOORE.
