SHADOW OF A CRIME.

It Rests Upon a Familiar Character of Chicago.

Tragedy in the Life of a Man Who Was Innocent of the Wrong of Which He Was Accused.

He is a picturesque ruin of a man, and if he lived in Paris or Munich or Rome or any other place where art students congregate he could make a comfortable living as a model, and his classic face probably would go down to posterity in many great paintings.

This face, which is as finely chiseled as that of the Apollo Belvidere, is familiar to thousands of Chicagoans whose business takes them frequently to the heart of the city. It belongs to an individual who has "tramp" written on every inch of his person save the little square of white that shows under the ragged hat brim and above the shock of tangled, unkempt black whiskers. Here the fine Grecian nose, the clear, calm eyes and the delicately arched eyebrows indicate the man of gentle breeding. He shambles along with a shiftless, aimless gait, but if you look at him attentively you will detect, even under the rags, a certain grace that is reminiscent of the cultured man.

His hair, which is raven black, hangs over his coat collar in long, matted curls. His clothes are ragged and in the last stages of dilapidation, but there is something in his personality that appeals to the sympathy and pity of scores of people who would see an ordinary specimen of the genus hobo starve to death without a qualm of conscience. Such people slip him a nickel or a dime whenever they meet him, although he never asks for help except with his pathetic eyes.

The chances are that not a dozen people of the hundreds to whom this forlorn creature is a familiar object know the tragedy of his life. He never speaks of it himself. Perhaps he has no recollection of it, because his reason was clouded by it.

Less than ten years ago he came to Chicago from some large town down in the state, full of energy and ambition. He was well educated, dapper (for he is not an old man), handsome and fastidious in his dress and personal appearance. He secured a position in a large business house of this city and by dint of application and ability was promoted to a place of responsibility and financial trust.

One day the discovery was made that the funds of the company were being tampered with. The members of the firm jumped to a hasty conclusion and fixed suspicion on this man. Before making a full investigation he was arrested, charged with embezzlement. Then followed the investigation which showed that he was entirely innocent, and he was exonerated.

But the exoneration came too late. The shock of the arrest and the baseless charge had unhinged his mind and he became another personality, dogged by phantoms and haunted by frightful fears. His employer tried giving him a better position, but he was incapable of work. He became a bit of human driftwood, abandoned by his friends, and now simply waits for death.—Chicago Tribune.

A PRINCE'S EDUCATION.

The Great-Grandson of Queen Victoria Is Getting to Be a Big Boy Now.

The present idol of the British public is Prince Edward of York, eldest son of the duke of York, grandson of the prince of Wales, great-grandson of Queen Victoria, and the heir in direct line of the crown of Great Britain. Prince Edward, having been born on June 23, 1894, is now well into his sixth year, and regards himself as quite a big boy, says Youth's Companion.

His brother Albert is a year younger, and the two princes have had, perhaps, their share, but no more, of brotherly "scraps." The duke of York is said not to have interfered with their small wars, saying that to "let them fight it out will make them better men." But he has interfered successfully with another weakness of Prince Edward.

It is customary for the royal children, in meeting the queen, to kiss her hand and not her cheek; but Prince Edward did not like to do this, and objected strenuously. One day he heard some one speak of "her majesty."

"I know who 'her majesty' is," said he: "it's just granny!"

"And who was the naughty little prince who would not kiss granny's hand?"

"That was me," said Prince Edward, unabashed, "and I'm not going to kiss granny's hand!"

But when he had arrived at the age of five he felt himself quite a man, and began to do as other men did—kissed the queen's hand and always doffed his cap in her presence.

THE SPENDTHRIFT.

What Befalls the One Who Neglects to Provide for the "Rainy Day."

By most men the rosy dreams of youth are never realized. The workmen must always far outnumber the employers, more than 100 to 1. The man who puts off the practice of economy, waiting for a time when it will be easier for him to deprive himself of certain pet luxuries, learns when it is too late that he has passed the point where he can demand of the present that it shall help provide for his future. Among all the acquaintances I have had in the past 40 years, not one spendthrift among them has retired from business a successful man.

Possibly you may look upon that word "spendthrift" as one that cannot be applied to you. You may think it applies only to one who foolishly throws away a fortune. If you will turn to your dictionary you will read that he is a spendthrift who is improvident or wasteful. The word applies with equal force to the man earning ten dollars a week and to him who has thousands.

There are no miracles in a business career. The man who wins success has toiled early and late with all his powers of body and mind. He has been subservient to his ambition. He has pushed aside, because it was the first step toward success, every habit and desire that stood between him and his goal. No man was ever numbered among the successful ones unless he was waiting and prepared for Fortune when she knocked at his door. She has never yet been known to wait for any man or boy to prepare himself for her company. I know of no one habit that so thoroughly molds the character of a young man as the habit of economy. It gives him strength of will. It teaches him to look beyond an action to its final result. It continually reminds him that the pure, sweet, innocent pleasures of life are almost to be had for the asking, and that Satan is not only a cruel but an expensive taskmaster.
