A new process is being tried with Canadian cheese at the four cooling rooms established by the Dominion government. The cheese as soon as received at these curing rooms is dipped in melted paraffin wax, by which process the cheese is covered with a thin, impervious coating that improves its appearance, reduces the shrinkage and effectually prevents the growth of the cheese. This practice has been tried before; but, so far as is known, it has not been successfully applied to Canadian cheddar cheese of the regufor size when cured at the temperature of an ordinary cheese curing room. The heating of the cheese and consequent swelling and exudation of fat cause the wax to peel off.
