But we will say that an accident in the office caused great loss of type ready for this publication and we have done the best we could to make up the issue and get out in time.

OPERA HOUSE MEETING.

Congressman Williams and Binger Hermann the Speakers.

The meeting was called to order by Hon. A. M. Crawford, the Attorney-General of Oregon, who, after a few brief remarks, introduced Hon. J. N. Williamson, congressman from the second district, who addressed the audience on behalf of Mr. Hermann, for the short space of 20 minutes. Mr. Williamson urged that all voters support Mr. Hermann, as he is the man that Oregon needs in the halls of Congress, as he best knows the needs of the people and he is a man who knows personally most all the members of Congress, he would be more than any other man that Oregon could send at the present time to do good for the people of this state and the welfare of the Northwest. Mr. Williamson also stated that we have already two new men in Congress and that it would be ill advised to send another new man; and urged the voters to fill the vacancy with one who is true and tried and of ripe experience.

When Mr. Hermann arose to address the citizens of Roseburg at the Theater, last night a deafening applause lasting fully four minutes, greeted him from the four hundred neighbors and friends of the distinguished republican leader, and throughout the entire address, Mr. Hermann was continually interrupted by a deafening applause, as he refused charge after charge and lie after lie that has been circulated by the dirt throwing democratic politicians and press, and when Mr. Hermann challenged any man especially the Review to step forward and attempt to prove the lies they have been publishing in regard to his supposed land steal, and his not being in harmony with the present administration, the deafening roar of applause showed how far the dirt throwing campaign waged by the democratic party has penetrated the hearts of the voters of Douglas County. When Mr. Hermann remarked that his opponent had asked to be sent to Congress because he "couldn't do any harm there" and asked that "we don't care about him not doing any harm, but what good can be accomplished by a minority representative and remarked that it would do just as much good to send a wooden automaton there as a live man of Mr. Reams stripes if it was certain that a wooden man could do no harm, the audience again showed its appreciation of the fact that Mr. Hermann has always held their sympathy and support.

There was a goodly number of old soldiers through the audience, who showed their sentiments by leading the applause at different times through the address.

Mr. Hermann spoke in part substantially as follows: that the opposition urged the election of Mr. Reams because he could do no harm if elected, but republicans thought a man should be elected because he could do some good, and republicans had a right to demand where they stood on the issues before the people, and also that the democrats had the right to make the same demands. That in the present contest the democrats, neither in their platform nor speeches, have told the people what position their nominee would take upon any of the public questions, if he should be elected, while the republicans have definitely outlined the position of their candidate, and pledged him to support all the policies of the party and the present administration. He accused the democrats of falsifying in regard to their charges that he was not in accord with the administration, and stated that he and President Roosevelt had been personal friends for years. He admitted that he and Secretary Hitchcock were not in accord and that it arose from the fact that he opposed the proposed forest reserve in southwestern Oregon, and disapproved it in January, 1902, while the Secretary favored it. That Hermann favored the settlers rather than the corporations, and believed that the public lands of the state should be given to actual settlers and residents of Oregon. He also defended the people of Oregon against Hitchcock's charges of fraud and corruption, and claimed the people of our state were as honest and patriotic as those of any other state in the Union.

He then outlined the policy of the republican party to regulate the trusts and enact and enforce such laws that they may be controlled, and that the party was now doing that very thing and the courts were controlling the trusts by enforcing the laws enacted by the republican party, and if present laws were not sufficient they would be amended.

He advised maintaining our foreign trade, and concluded by paying a glowing tribute to the heroes of the Civil War, the boys who served in the Spanish War, the Indian War veterans and the grand old pioneers. We are sorry we cannot give his speech in full, but it was the most statesmanlike, political speech which has been made in this county for many years.

SCHOOL CLASSES.

Twenty-three Graduates of the Eighth Grade of the Roseburg Schools Receive Diplomas.

Thursday evening's excellent program marks the final closing of a very successful year for the Roseburg Public School. The graduating exercises of the eighth grade were somewhat delayed, as the results of the state examination were not known till early last week. Nearly all of the twenty-three members had parts in the program. Space forbids the special mention each one deserves, but it can be truthfully said that all acquitted themselves with honor. The recitations were well selected and delivered, and the musical numbers, which were of a high order of excellence, showed an unusual amount of musical talent.

Special features were the address to the class by President Orcutt of the Normal School at Drain, whose words of wisdom and good advice were well received, and County Superintendent Hamlin's happy presentation of the diplomas to the class.

The large audience present manifested their appreciation of the efforts of the participants by generous applause, and showed also their enthusiastic interest in their school.

Miss Hestine, who has had charge of the eighth grade during the past two years, had the direction and management of the preparation for the evening's exercise, and is, indeed, entitled to much credit for the excellent showing made by the class.

Hand Mashed.
Cottage Grove, Oregon, May 30, 1903.

Frank Pickett, conductor on one of the work trains on the Bohemia railroad, met with an accident out at the front Friday that came near costing him his good right hand. While in the act of coupling up his train his hand was caught in the old fashioned link and pin coupling and cut open the entire length of the palm and also considerably crushed and bruised. He came to town in the evening in company with V. C. London and had the wound dressed by Dr. Job and only lost one day as a result of his injury, but considerably pluck was required to resume work so soon after the accident.

Almost A Tragedy.

A Grants Pass special of Friday says: Yesterday Joseph Lomas, a rancher, who lives a few miles out from Grants Pass, came into town, and hunting up Sheriff Lewis, informed him that he had killed a man out on his ranch. He said he had struck Everett Brown, a man who was cutting wood at his place, over the head with a manzanita club, and he believed he had killed him. Sheriff Lewis and a physician went immediately to the scene of the trouble, after locking Lomas up. Arriving out there, they discovered that Lomas had not killed Brown, but had badly wounded him. Brown has been cutting wood for some time on the Lomas ranch. Yesterday he and Lomas engaged in a quarrel over some matter, and Lomas grew infuriated and struck Brown on the head with a large manzanita club. Mrs. Brown appeared on the scene and attempted to quiet the two men, and was also knocked down by Lomas and manzanita club. Lomas then made away and came immediately to town and gave himself up. Everett Brown was recently released from the insane asylum, where he had been sent on account of a mental derangement resulting from worry over trouble caused from taking 25 cents from a letter while engaged as weighing clerk on the O. R. & N. last fall. He had about recovered, Lomas has again deranged his mind, and it is feared he will have to be returned to the asylum. Brown is an ambitious young man, is a former Captain of Company H. O. N. G. of this city but somehow he seems destined to misfortune.

Removing Warts from Stock.
Prof. Cottrell, of Kansas, has two methods for taking warts from cattle which he describes as follows: "In order to experiment on taking off the warts a red, pulled heifer was selected on which the warts were so thick that it was impossible to place a hand on her without touching several large growths. On her head and shoulders we applied castor oil—well rubbed in—twice daily for a week. Shortly after each application a portion of the warts were entirely cured without any pain to the animal in any respect. On the back and hips of the same heifer we used concentrated acetic acid, applying it with a fountain pen filled and soaking the wart thoroughly after applying grease around the root to keep the acid from eating the flesh. About twelve hours after operation the warts could be pulled out easily. This was the quicker way, but it caused considerable pain and irritation and is accompanied by some danger of acid dropping upon the skin and thus causing trouble."

Bee Stings a Cure for Rheumatism.

Dr. Perc of Marburg, Germany, addressed a brilliant gathering of physicians on Thursday on the healing properties of bee stings in cases of rheumatism of the joints and muscles. The professor pointed out that it has been known from time immemorial as a cure among the poorer classes of people. Dr. Perc allows his patients to be stung at first by a few bees, and then gradually increases the number. The stings are inserted near the joint of the muscle affected. In one sitting he described twenty bees to sting the patient. He described the case of a woman who suffered excruciating tortures from rheumatism. In the course of her cure she was stung 6052 times, and this resulted in a complete cure. Dr. Perc claims that every organism is made immune from bee poison and also immune from rheumatism.

Great Britain's Monroe Doctrine.

The claim set up by Lord Lansdowne, the British foreign secretary, to the control of the Persian gulf is an inaptly termed the British "Monroe doctrine." The terms employed by Lord Lansdowne in warning the powers to keep hands off the Persian gulf are not unlike those used by President Monroe in notifying the nations of the old world that they must keep hands off the new world. "We should regard," Lord Lansdowne says, "the establishment of a naval base or a fortified port in the Persian gulf by any other power as a very grave menace to British interests," which is simply a paraphrase of what Mr. Monroe said of European aggression in this hemisphere, but Lord Lansdowne supplements this by saying, "We should certainly resist it with all the means at our disposal." President Monroe made no threat, but his words were generally understood to indicate that a violation of the Monroe doctrine would be treated as a casus belli.

President Monroe's declaration was made in the instance and in the application which he made of a well known principle. The underlying principle, which he applied to American affairs, is as old as government itself. That principle is the right of every government to protect its own interests, to defend itself from measures which point to ultimate aggression. The particular doctrine which Monroe defined officially, but which Thomas Jefferson and others had previously asserted, was that the interests of the United States are paramount on this hemisphere, and hence that we must regard as unfriendly any attempts on the part of Europe to strengthen its hold upon this territory.

The British declaration resembles that of the United States only in applying the doctrine of national self defense to particular conditions. But the conditions themselves are altogether different. Mr. Monroe asserted this right with reference to a hemisphere upon which our country was then and was destined to remain the dominant power. Lord Lansdowne in effect claims property in the Persian gulf, a body of water upon which there is not a foot of British territory. It is of importance to Great Britain because it is on the road to India, a British dependency. The presence of another power in the Persian gulf would greatly menace Great Britain's Indian possessions, and hence the promulgation of this "Monroe doctrine." Whether Great Britain can enforce this doctrine against the aggressions of other powers, particularly Germany and Russia, which have interests in that quarter, or to what lengths the British government will go in efforts to enforce it remains to be seen. It is significant, however, that the Britons should have applied an American principle to the situation in Asia.

A dispatch to the Record-Herald from Philadelphia says:

The North American sent Count Tolstol a cablegram asking him if the Russian government can be held guilty of the massacre of the Jews in Kishinef. He replied: "Moscow, May 28.—The Russian government. First, for excluding the Jews from common rights, making them a caste; second, for inciting by force in Rumania an idolatrous faith instead of Christianity. Tolstol."
