Too Many Grafters.

The business men will do well to organize an associated charity club for self-protection against the army of tramps who seek for Charity. If all the business men would organize a society and become members of it and elect a secretary, or charity board to enquire into all cases asking for help, there would be very few who would apply. We do not object to helping a person worthy of help and that should be promptly done, but to be pestered by fakirs of all kinds and men, who want a drink and all that kind of business is a little more than the average man can stand. With such an association, all a member has to do is to point short the usual humane is to point to the card in the office which says "Member of Associated Charities." Apply in—for help it worthy; and very few know apply.
