The case of the State of Oregon vs. Ismael Dew Claws and Late Hughes for the unlawful catching of Salmon with a grab hook at Winchester was tried before Justice Buchanan, Monday, on complaint of H. A. Webster, deputy fish warden from Oregon City. Dist. Attorney Geo. M. Brown appeared for the state and Attorney Long and Fullerton for the defendants. After a deliberation of two hours the jury could not agree and were dismissed. The case was continued until July 1, 1903.

Roseburg is coming to the front as the center of a promising, but still undeveloped mining region, and is attracting those who are interested in mines and minerals. We learn that Mr. Robert W. Fenn, formerly a United States Deputy Mineral Surveyor for California, has opened an office in town this week. Mr. Fenn has but lately returned from Brazil, South America, where he has been connected with the Government Geological and Geographical Survey both in the topographical and geological departments. He was also in charge of the topographical and geological work of the Union Oil Co. of California for six years. The Union Oil Co. are the great oil producers and manufacturers of petroleum in the West. Mr. Fenn believes in the future of this region and is satisfied that those who advised him to come here and settle were not amiss in their favorable judgment of the place. It is a distinct advantage to the vicinity to have those who are experienced in high class professional work come here and especially in the line of mineral development.
