

THE NEW STYLES.

Walking and Travelling Costumes.
Some Long Coats.
The walking and the traveling costume clear the ground by an inch. It is considered very bad form to wear a trailing skirt on any but a dressy occasion.
For summer nothing can be more useful than a suit of navy blue chevot made with a platted skirt held into a yoke around the hips, the jacket a blouse with slightly puffed sleeves and a cape effect.

CHIFFON BUFFLE.
Long coats will not be worn so much except for motoring and traveling.
The three-quarter length is considered smarter and more dressy.
Coats of silk are made unlined, and the waives include peau de soie, peau de cygne, both plain and dotted, as well as grosgrain, tulle and soft makes of taffeta.
Moire is not in vogue, as it was last year. A hall gown seen recently was of crepe de chine with the bodice laid in crosswise folds and the skirt trailing in the same fashion. The sleeves were merely short ruffles, and the décolletage was enriched with a bertha of lace, while a panel of the same ran down the front of the skirt by way of completing a pointed hip yoke, also of the lace.

The popularity of red seems to increase. Red serge, red foulard and voile, spotted for preference, red hosiery and red linen clerical intermingled with white or ecru abound on every side.
The cut shows a very smart chiffon ruffe with an inner band of black velvet and an edging of the same.

FOR SUMMER WEAR.

Red Muslin Under and Chic-Practical Blue Serge Frocks.
There is a fancy for red, especially in muslin. This color stands a good deal of wear without looking soiled. It is always difficult to lay down hard and fast rules in the matter of colors. In the early part of the season people declared it would be a black and white one. It is always so more or less, because there is something very odd about black and white mixtures, but the choice of colors will be unlimited. The majority of women remain faithful of number hues in cloth and reveal in bright shades where muslins, linens and such fabrics are concerned.

A dark blue serge frock made recently for morning wear had a skirt which cleared the ground all the way around and was arranged in small kinks. The light coat was tight at the back, finished with a wide band of blue taffeta. The front fell loosely over a plain waistcoat, with a chemise of muslin, completed by a very wide butterfly bow. The three cornered hat of blue straw was trimmed with a curiously striped blue taffeta ribbon.
The plait skirt has certainly fallen from popular favor. The very smart models seem to show tuckings and plaitings. These plaited skirts are confined around the hips by means of a yoke or rows of stitches, and they are allowed to flare from the knees outward. The newest fashion is to have the held in effect, made shorter in the back than it is in the front.
The skirts in the illustration are both chic and pretty.
