Douglas County Pioneers.

Those vessels that came into the river in October brought in quite a number of passengers seeking homes. Among them was A. C. Gibbs, who afterwards became governor of the state, (the second governor under the state organization.) John Whittaker being the first—A. R. Flint was the first county clerk of Douglas county, David Underwood, who held many offices in Umpqua county, before it was attached to Douglas county, and who finally became Lieutenant in the Oregon Volunteers. I was in charge of the first pack train ever driven into Scottsburg. We heard that there was a number of vessels in the river, which was a fact. We supposed that they had brought supplies of groceries and clothing, things we were very much in need of, but when I got to Scottsburg I learned that they had brought no supplies, had merely come in for piling. George Snelling, however, was in Scottsburg with a large tent with a few things he had saved from the wreck of the Bostonian, for sale; but we did not get half a load, for our little train and packed up the few goods the home seekers had. I distinctly remember that all the worldly goods our future governor possessed, besides what cash he may have had, was contained in a common cotton handkerchief, and others were in the same situation. Reason Reed and family, located on the bank of the Calapooia creek in the fall of 1850. Elijah Banton and family, stopped a while in Winchester, in the fall of 1850, and then took up a claim a short distance northwest of the present village of Wilbur, which I believe is now owned by S. Chenoweth. I do not think it is necessary for me to carry this matter any further, as it will be seen there was getting to be quite a number of people in the valley. It will be seen from the above with the exception of Mrs. Cowan, who is now living in Yoncalla, that I have lived longer in the Umpqua Valley than any other white person, with the possible exception of John Gardner, who located on the river 20 or 21 years ahead of me, but I think he has been dead longer than that. The history of the Pacific Northwest, says that the Cowans and Applegates located on the northern boundary danger line in regard to the Indians. That the reason of their herds and flocks being immune from destruction by the Umpqua Indians, was owing to the Clickatat Indians being in the valley. I am well aware that the Clickatat Indians spent a large portion of their time in the northern portion of the Umpqua Valley, but I never saw them as far south as the Umpqua river, but once, and that was in the winter of 1850 and 1851, when Elijah Banton got very badly scared and sent a mulatto to W. H. Wilson for ammunition, stating that Mr. Aiken and I had sent him for the ammunition. Mr. Wilson told me afterwards that he took it for a hoax as Mr. Aiken and I had been living on the river for nearly three years, and never had any trouble with the Indians. But to be on the safe side, he went and hunted up the Clickatat Indians and sent them out to see what was the matter. They were a very friendly tribe as far as my acquaintance goes, and the chief always went as Quarterly among the whites, and he always appeared very much like a gentleman, especially for an Indian. I was introduced to him in the winter of 1847 and 1848, and we were always on good terms after that. Mr. Aiken and family, and two or three men besides myself were living at Winchester at that time, not having made any improvements on the north side of the river, we were all on the south side. The Indians came riding up and called for the boat. I took the boat over and as soon as I landed, Quarterly came to me and enquired if there was any trouble with the local Indians. I told him there was none, so far as I knew. He said he told Mr. Wilson it was a lie, there were some 30 or 40 of them well mounted, well clothed and well armed. Quarterly said he wanted to cross the river. I told him all right, and all that wanted to cross, to come on. Some eight or ten of them came over, and all but Quarterly went down the river and rode down to the river opposite to the cabin where Mr. Aiken and I lived, when we kept ferry below Winchester. The cabin was occupied by an old bachelor, who was nearly scared to death, although the Indians were on the opposite side of the river, and the river tolerable high. He climbed out of the chimney as the door faced the river, and he never stop-

Great Exposition and Carnival at Portland.

"The Merchants and Manufacturers Exposition will be held at Portland, September 14th to 20th, inclusive.

For this occasion the Southern Pacific Company will sell tickets to Portland and return, including coupon of admission at a rate of $8.60 from Roseburg. Sale dates September 15th, 18th, 22nd, and 25th.

Tickets sold at stations south of the Fair Grounds will allow stop-overs at that point, enabling holders to visit the Oregon State Fair.

The Exposition will be held on Multnomah Club Grounds and adjacent streets, and in addition to exhibits by merchants and manufacturers, Jabours Circus, with its many attractions, has been secured.

A special feature will be the Grand Spectacular Ballet, "When Knighthood was in Flower," by sixty trained dancers in gorgeous costumes, prepared for the occasion." 69-824.

An American student has recently made an important discovery in Yucatan near the old buried city of Copan. He has unearthed a colossal statue, more than twenty feet high, exquisitely sculptured from a single stone, the features resembling a negro, having a forehead twenty-five inches in width, and on his head a hood or covering, exactly similar to that of the famous Egyptian sphynx. While the pyramid of Gizeh and the sphynx have been considered the oldest creations of man, the discoveries made in Central America during the last quarter of a century by Le Plongeon and other explorers, point directly to a much older civilization on the American continent, that not only antedates anything found in Egypt, but proves conclusively the American origin of the civilization of the eastern hemisphere. The subject is one of interest to every scholar, and we can only hope that full er light will soon be thrown on it.
