Today at 1:30 o'clock Mrs. A. C. Marsters very charmingly presided as hostess at luncheon, at which there were eleven guests. The floral decorations were entirely in cosmos and chrysanthemums, the hall and parlor being wonderfully pretty with the lavish use of deep pink and pale raspberry roses in the great blossoms set off by the green of sword leaf ferns. But perhaps prettier still was the dining room, where only white and yellow appeared, the flowers shading from snowiest white to the deepest golden yellows. In the corners of the room were enormous bowls of the flowers, and the mantle was well nigh hidden under them. Suspended just over the table was a basket brimful of chrysanthemums, and a tall vase full of the flowers formed the center piece, on a Mexican drawn work square over yellow satin. The biggest of yellow and white chrysanthemums lay at each corner and the place cards were circular discs in pastel tones, hand decorated in floral designs. The menu consisted of eight courses. Misses Stella Hamilton and Jeanie Buick assisted Mrs. Marsters and the guests were: Mesdames J. T. Bridges, F. W. Haynes, M. Josephson, S. C. Flint, J. F. Barker, John Wright, W. T. Wright, F. H. Churchill, W. R. Willis, K. L. Miller, Louis Barzee.

Interest among local theater-goers is aroused over the announcement that "The Christian" will be presented at the theater. Of all the modern dramas, and there have been many, no play has received greater praise, nor created wider discussion than the dramatization of Hall Caine's famous novel. As a book it sold by thousands and Mr. Caine received more in royalties from this story alone than many of the earlier novelists of England did during their entire literary career. Never since "The Christian" was originally produced by Miss Viola Allen has the play been invested with such a first-class company and such complete scenic equipment as that which will present it at Roseburg this season. The production has the reputation of being the best ever sent out from New York in the play. Not even the slightest details have been overlooked, and the performance is being praised along its route for the very thorough manner in which the powerful drama is treated. Play-goers in Roseburg will have good reason to congratulate themselves in having this opportunity to witness a magnificent production.
