A Large Prune Crop. R. D. Teter from the Liberty neighborhood, and one of the largest and best prune districts of Oregon, left at the Stateman office Thursday a small limb from one of his Italian prune trees. The limb was thick with embryo prunes, showing that if they all mature there will be as much fruit on that tree as it will be able to hold up. This is only a sample of the other Italian prune trees in this orchard, and the orchard of Mr. Teter is not favored in this respect above those of his neighbors. Prunes in that big crop of Italian prunes in that district, from present indications. There was some damage on low lands, but the blossoms on an Italian prune tree are so thick that a large percentage of them may be blighted, and yet enough remain to mature a full crop of fruit. By the way, some gentlemen in the Stateman office a few days ago were discussing the reason why there was more damage to the prune blossoms on the low lands than on the hills. One of them explained that the cold air is heavier and settles to the bottom, while the warmer air is lighter and goes to the top. He explained that the air in a room near the ceiling is much warmer than that near the floor, a fact well known to paperhangers. Still further up, on the mountains, he explained, that there is another stratum of air, which is colder than the air in the room. It is well known to the residents of the South Salem hills that they live in a different atmosphere from those down town on the business streets. There is about three degrees difference in the winter time between the first hill south of Commercial street and in the street in the main part of town, at the Stateman office for instance—three degrees less of coldness up there than down here. And three degrees less of warmth in the summer time there than here.—Salem Statesman.

First Crop in Forty Years. By a singular coincidence the Gettysburg wheatfield, which the contending forces swept across six times in deadly conflict July, 1863, is now blooming again with ripening wheat for the first time since the battle. After forty years it is ready for the harvest, just as it was two generations ago when the Blue and Gray contended for supremacy across its broad acres. It was planted in wheat last fall and it is odd that its first crop since the battle should be ready for the blade of the harvester at a time when we are celebrating the fortieth anniversary of the great fight. Happening as it does, it is one of the attractions that cannot fail to draw the interested attention of our visitors. The grain of forty years ago was destined never to be harvested. Trodden down by the feet of the soldiers, it was a bier for the dead and a bed for the wounded. It is said that the field was so covered by fallen men that one could walk from the one end to the other upon bodies lying there without touching foot to the ground. This year's yield has come upon a happier period. It witnessed a peaceful country. It died in peace, where there was war and friends where there were foes. Blue and Gray clasped in fraternal grip the hands that were uplifted against each other. The grain waves undisturbed, a mute symbol of serenity. It could not ripen at a more auspicious or appropriate time than now, forty years after the battle, when men from North and South are gathering here to celebrate the valor of the past.—Gettysburg Progress.

Are Separators Profitable? There have been improvements along all lines of farm work. This is no less true of the dairy work on the farm. Think of the work it used to take when milk was strained away in gallon crocks or pans with from half a gallon to three quarts in each crock, and some the number of crocks it would take to hold the milk of six to ten cows. Those crocks of milk must all be set away to cool and for the cream to rise, and then the work of skimming the cream, emptying the milk, washing and scalding the crocks and lids and getting out on a table to sun. I am afraid a good many of us would cease to be butter makers if we had to return to those former days. As an improvement over this method milk was put in tall cans holding from three to five gallons each. These were kept in cool water. This was quite a saving of labor, as there were fewer vessels to care for. I consider the separator is as much of a saving in labor over the cans as the cans were over the crocks, and in addition gets more cream from the same amount of milk. There are many modern tests to find out the actual gain of the separator over skimming. I have not felt like going back to the skimming process even for the sake of a test. But from a test made in December I find that by using the separator 12 gallons of milk gives three gallons of cream, for which I churned 7 1/2 pounds of butter, or 9-2 ounces of butter for a gallon of milk. By letting 12 gallons of milk set 36 hours, then skimming closely, I got less than two gallons of cream which churned four pounds and two ounces of butter, or 5-1-6 ounces to the gallon of milk. I run the milk through the separator after it had been skimmed and from this cream I churned two pounds and six ounces of butter. I lost by skimming on 12 gallons of milk, counting butter at 25 cents a pound, or cream at 80 cents a gallon, just about 60 cents or 5 cents on each gallon of milk. In Mrs. Gilbert's paper, read at the institute last year, she says that from her herd of 20 Jerseys she sold $100 worth of cream for four months, which was equal to $5 a cow. We sold $80 worth from eight cows—six Jerseys and two Shorthorns—which is equal to $7.50 to the cow per month, and according to those figures they received just two-thirds as much per cow as we did. I have a number of testimonials and they all secure from one-fourth to one-half more cream by using the separator. I consider that the separator is of greater profit in the summer than in winter, as comparatively few farmers put up ics and are prepared for keeping the milk cool as it should be for the cream to raise well. The separator cream should be cooled as quickly as possible. Put it in cold water and stir a few minutes with a spoon. The next cream must be thoroughly cooled before putting the two or more skims together. In this way the cream can be kept till there is enough for a churning and all ripened at one time, and there never need be a shadow of difference in the quality of your butter. I have heard the objection raised that separator cream made oily, salty butter. This is not the case at all. The grain is just as nice as when the cream is allowed to raise. I think the grain of butter depends largely on the temperature at which it is churned and the way it is worked afterward. Ten minutes is ample time to take the separator apart, wash and scald it, and put it away—beginning w-shing as soon as it stops running. While it is warm it is much easier cleaned. I wash with warm water and scald each piece with boiling water after I wash it. Leave the parts apart to air till you want it for use again. The cost of a good separator is a great drawback to a great many people, but with seven or eight cows you can get enough more cream in one year to more than pay for the separator. Then after that will be that much clear gain, to say nothing of the saving in labor. When the separator is perfectly level, properly adjusted and run with proper speed, there is scarcely a trace of cream left in the milk. The milk is strained and run through the separator while still warm. If you are raising calves by hand take the milk from the separator and feed them without the work of heating it for them, or it can be fed to the pigs and all parts washed and no cooling of milk or pumping of water. The separator is not hard to run, but you have to learn to run it with ease. It turns with a swinging motion something like a barrel churn. Our 5-year-old girl can run it with good speed for a while. The expense of the separator has been about 75 cents a year, principally for rubber packing rings and oil. The separator has ceased to be an experiment, but is a necessity, the same as any of the other improved machinery on the farm. The farmer should use a separator both for profit and a labor saver.—A. B. Higgins, in Neb. Dairyman.

Canning Cheese. One of the recent bulletins from the Oregon Agricultural Experiment Station, at Corvallis, is entitled "Canning Cheese." It was prepared by E. F. Perot, bacteriologist of that institution, and contains a good deal of the matter which was given in a similar bulletin some time ago on the same subject. Experiments in the canning of cheese have been successful at the Oregon Station and bulletin tells all about them. Some of its concluding paragraphs are as follows: The market now demands food to be in sealed packages and not so much in bulk as formerly; and the sale of cheese will be increased when it can be purchased in cans or packages upon which is marked its age and flavor, the latter being designed by letter or by name; this will be accomplished by the use of pure cultures and by curing the cheese in cans, or by some other means which will exclude the influence of other organisms. It seems as though the present method of making cheese is not in keeping with the care exercised in making butter. From the time milk is received at the dairy until the butter is wrapped in paper, the hands of a modern dairyman never come in contact with either material or product. In cheese making it is handled with the hands throughout the process, and it is not uncommon to see an operator bending over a vat with his hands and arms submerged nearly to the elbows, stirring the curd during the "cooking" and other parts of the operation. This would interfere to a more marked degree in the flavor of cheese made with a pure culture, than it would with butter if treated in the same manner, because the flavoring of cheese is a secondary reaction. Means may yet be devised, by which the curd will be handled with fingered paddles, or other implements, doing the work of the hands, thus obviating the introduction of any objectionable organisms. As an article of food for export trade, or army use, cheese cured in cans would be very desirable, as it is condensed, nutritious, and in convenient form for transportation. There are others besides cheddar cheese, which could be made and cured in cans. A soft cheese having the consistency of thick cream, that could be spread upon bread, would likely find a ready market in the Orient. Some work was done in this line, but no definite results reached. Several lots of cheese were canned without previously inoculating the milk, and they turned out well. Inoculating the milk with pure cultures in other lots was for the purpose of controlling the flavor, and proved successful. Good results will only be attained either way by dairymen who are competent to make first-class cheese, as the curing in cans will not correct any error made in preparing the curd.

Thoughts of My Western Home. Sierras and eternal tents Of snow that flashed o'er battlements Of mountains! My land of the sun, Am I not true? Have I not done All things for thee, for thee alone, O sunland, sealand, thou mine own? From other loves and other lands, As true, perhaps, as strong of hands, Have I not turned to thee and thine, O sunland of the palm and pine, And sung thy scenes, surpassing skies, Till Europe lifted up her face, And marvel'd at thy matchless grace? With eager and inquiring eyes? Be my reward some little place To pitch my tent, some tree and vine Where I may sit above the sea, Or days to climb to Shasta's dome Again, and be with gods at home; Salute my mountains—clouded Hood, Saint Helens in its sea of wood— Where sweeps the Oregon, and where White storms are in the leathern fl.

A WIFE'S CONFESSION. Of course every one knew when they were engaged and every one who was surprised when they heard it was Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, by which she had broken off. It was first said she had broken off, then that his heart had changed, but finally she confessed that she had been so irritable, so depressed and blue that she had fairly driven him away. Her good looks were vanishing. She was getting thin, pale, and hollow-checked, with dark circles around her eyes, and a general air of distress. She was pleased again to hear of the engagement being renewed, and it was not long before a beautiful and radiant bride was taken to the altar. She had regained her good looks, her former happy disposition and strong nerve all through a secret friend gave her. A few bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, by which she was made more lively, happy and a radiant bride more beautiful than she had ever appeared before. Backed up by over a third of a century of remarkable and uniform cures, a record such as no other remedy for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women ever attained, the proprietors and makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now feel fully warranted in offering to pay $500 in legal money of the United States, for any case of Leucorrhoea, Female Weakness, Prolapsus or Falling of Womb which they cannot cure. All they ask is a fair and reasonable trial of their means of cure. Mrs. O. O. Scripture, of Prescott, Ariz., L. Box 526, writes: "For nearly two years I was a great sufferer with irregular and painful menstruation, and also suffered severely with dyspepsia and indigestion. I had been married for several years; got no better, until about seven months ago I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and Pleasant Pellets. I can stand on my feet now, and I feel that I shall be a new woman in a few days, and shall ever feel grateful to you and shall always recommend your medicine to all who are suffering in any way."
