There was the Stables just after midnight and started old vine clad wayside well; cosy corners; home, when on reaching a dark place in canopied booths; palms; evergreen and the street between the McClallen Hotel patriotic steamers; Chinese souvenir and the Deer Creek bridge, a man seized his horse by the bridle and ordered him to halt. He says in the struggle which followed the stranger pointed his revolver up at him and fired, the ball passing through the forefinger of the left hand, the fellow then fleeing. Ingram came back up town anthemums. Scores of electric lights time and had his finger dressed by a local physician. This explanation is in correction of the statement made by others that Ingram was drinking and accidentally shot himself. He says he had no revolver on his person that night

OFF FOR WASHINGTON

Representative to Congress from the go before the House committee on rivers and harbors, which will adjourn the end of next week after having prepared reommendations for river and harbor appropriations. He said:

"Unless Oregon shall be fully represented before the committee, appropriations for rivers and harbors in this state may be pruned even lower than the Chief of Engineers has cut down the estimates of Major Langfitt. Though the Columbia river does not touch his district, Mr. Hermann recognizes its needs as the most important will have to urge at the National capital. Luckily Congress is disposed to be genrous with the Columbia, no doubt because the river is one of the largest in the United States.

Mr. Hermann does not forget the less er harbors on the coast of Oregon, such as Tillamook, Coos Bay and the Siuslaw river, and says that he will bend his nergies to have them recognized in the next river and harbor bill. He is thor oughly convinced of the efficacy of dredging and will endeavor to secure appropriations for small sea dredges for the lesser harbors. He is of the opinion that the dredge Chinook has done more toward deepening the Columbia bar than has been credited to it
