FAMOUS TREASURE CASE SETTLED

Medford, Or., March 10 .- A surprising compromise that settled the famous "tin-can" case of Jackson county was reached at a quiet conference between the principals and their attorneys here yesterday, Roberts and O'Neil agreeing to pay to C. P. and W. O. Danielson $6,000 with accrued costs and interest, amounting in all to $10,000. Thus ends the noted treasure battle, which originated in the finding of a can of gold containing $7,000 in an outhouse belonging to Roberts and O'Neil, when the Donaldsons, plaintiffs, were still young.

When they found the money, Roberts and O'Neil, who had employed them to clean the outhouse, claimed it on the ground of owning the building. The boys claimed it on the ground that it was treasure, and consequently finders money. When they reached maturity they began suit. At first they were non-suited, and on appeal to the Supreme Court were non suited again. The case was submitted to a jury in the circuit court last fall, and the jury disagreed. It was continued without result at the December term.

While the compromise was unexpected, it was apparent that a jury could probably never be gotten together to agree on a decision, and indefinite lawing looked probable. Failing health in one of the litigants was another factor in bringing about a settlement.
