A striking feature of today's Plaindealer is Josephson's big mid-summer sale announcement, occupying nearly half of the editorial page. Not only is the ad striking in size, but also in the uncredibly low prices that it quotes for new, reasonable, defensible merchandise. At the same time the quality of the goods is insured by the fact that since 1877 The Big Store has been steadily engaged in treating people square. Josephson's enjoy the unique distinction of being not only the oldest, but also the most up-to-date merchandise firm in Roseburg.

Dr. J. E. Payton, of Redlands, Calif., was in the city this week, greeting his friends. He notes many substantial evidences of Roseburg's growth and prosperity during the past two years. Redlands, he states, has just voted a bond issue of $200,000 for paving with asphaltum or macadamizing about 38 miles of streets. They find that asphalt is the best and cheapest material for improving the principal streets. Dr. Payton thinks Roseburg people would do well to consider this matter and put such a movement into operation, as such improvements are not very expensive, but are permanent and worth many times their cost to any city.

FISH FOR DOUGLAS COUNTY WATERS

With the same shipment will come a supply of rainbow trout for the finely equipped little trout fishery of D. T. Awbrey at Cottage Grove.

LAND FRAUD CASES WILL BE EXPEDITED

Portland, July 5.—Federal Judge DeHaven will rush through the trials in the land fraud cases as evidenced today when 26 cases were called and defendants ordered to appear at once and plead or demur. The indictments for conspiracy returned against Frank J. Van Winkle, Frank M. Dugan and E. L. Siesler were dismissed. Prosecution stated that all defendants in the case against S. A. D. Pater, Horace McKinley, et al., agreed to plead guilty except State Senator F. P. Mays who is sick in California. Hermann's case was placed last on the docket. Arguments of a number of demurrers will be heard tomorrow.

SUPREME COURT SUSTAINS PROHIBITION

Salem, July 4.—The Supreme Court yesterday handed down a decision sustaining the validity of the local option liquor law adopted by the people in June, 1904. The opinion written by Chief Justice Wolverson holds that there is nothing in the constitution which prevents the adoption of a liquor law to take effect locally upon a vote of the people of the district affected.

This decision was rendered in the suit brought by H. F. Font to recover from the city of Hood River the saloon license fee he had paid in advance before the local option law became effective. The city refused to pay on the ground that the local option law is unconstitutional and that there is nothing to prevent the sale of liquor under the license. The circuit court upheld the local option law and this decision is sustained.

COAST BRANCH ROAD NEEDED

To THE EDITOR:—Although seemingly remote from the rest of the state, and strikingly so from our sister and much larger county—Douglas—adjoining on the east, Coos enjoys the distinction, commercially, of being one of the leading counties—population considered—in the state.

While Douglas county is admirably adapted to many profitable industries, especially sheep, cattle and poultry, and also fruit growing, Coos is destined—because of its favored shipping facilities—to be the commercial gateway for Douglas county, and in fact all central Oregon.

That the progress and prosperity of central and southern Oregon is crippled by the exorbitant freight and transportation rates now charged by the Southern Pacific Co., is only too well known to the producers, and therefore it is not too much to say that central Oregon is dependent on Coos county's shipping facilities for relief from the almost unbearable burden of an unrestricted monopoly.

The rapid and substantial development of the fine southwestern counties of Oregon, now setting in, is sufficiently prophetic of the much hoped for change of transportation. And in the not distant future we may reasonably expect to see the coast range penetrated by at least two lines of railroad, terminating on Coos Bay, viz. one from Drain, traversing the course of the Umpqua nearly to the sea, thence across to the Bay; The other from Roseburg via Myrtle Point. Thus a large per cent of the export trade of central and southern Oregon will find its way to the markets of the world through its natural avenue, Coos Bay.

F. S. BARBER, Drain, Ore.

A GASTLY AND PATHETIC FIND

Old Man Pionered Under Stump Takes His Life—Faithful Dog Stands Guard.

A gastly and pathetic discovery was made of the remains of Eli Miller, an old miner at his isolated mining claim 13 miles northeast of Myrtle Creek, last Monday July 3, by Green Hearn, who lives three miles from the old miner's diggings. Miller was to have met Hearn at his place on Sunday, but failing to keep his appointment Hearn went over Monday to learn why the old man had not kept his word, and thereby discovered his remains, pioniored by one leg by the roots of a huge stump, which had fallen in on him while he was digging a ditch almost under it. By the side of the body was Miller's sole companion, a faithful varmint hound which was nearly dead from starvation.

Circumstances attending the case show that the accident befell Miller on the 25th of June and that he died by his own hand. He kept a diary and the last entry therein was made on June 24. When found the body was in an advanced state of decomposition and the flesh of the throat had wasted away entirely. This latter condition was eloquently explained by an open clasp knife, covered with blood stains, lying near the body. Unable to free himself from the roots of the stump, which had crushed his leg into a jelly and despairing of ever getting help in that isolated place, Miller deliberately cut his throat in preference to dying a slow death from starvation—a death that would have been made doubly torturous by the intense pain from his pioniored leg. Miller's other leg had also been caught under the stump, but he had freed the limb by backing away the roots with the grubbing hoe which he had been using at work on the ditch. This leg had also been badly crushed.

Immediately after discovering the body, Hearn went to Myrtle Creek and notified the authorities. A party of men under direction of Justice of Peace W. T. Hurst, went to the scene of the accident, secured the body and then brought it to Myrtle Creek, where it was buried. No inquest was held, just a Hearn considering such proceedings unnecessary in view of all the plain circumstances attending the case.

Miller was about 70 years of age. He had followed mining in the vicinity of Myrtle Creek for about 17 years. He was never married and his only known surviving relative is a niece, who resides in California.

An unknown man deliberately laid down on the track before an approaching train at Gold Hill the Fourth and was frightfully mangled.
