HAS NO LOVE FOR THE RUSSIAN CZAR

Roseburg has as one of its citizens a man who a Russian by birth, yet he has no love for the powers which now control his native land. Reference is made to Martin Markeson, one of the inmates of the Soldiers' Home, located in this city. In his native tongue the name is spelled Markuzon, but Markeson is the American way of calling it.

He was born on the borders of the Black Sea, and with his mother's milk imbibed the spirit of rebellion against Russian institutions from the Czar down to the least harmful servant of the state. He hates his country but loves his countrymen and gives good and lusty reasons for his bitter antipathies. He hungered for a long continuance of the Russo-Japanese war because he believed it would end in the enlightenment of the stupid Russ who is doing the fighting, and has backed his desire by an honest attempt to join the Japanese army, an attempt frustrated only by an edict of the Japanese military code which precludes the enlistment of a man of the enemy's race and country, and this is proven by letters he bears from Japanese officers in high places.

Mr. Markeson is in his prime, being 41 years of age and his peculiar trend of revolutionary thought has grown with his growth and fits him like a garment. He argues from the premises of a man educated to his theory in the hardest school of personal contact and experience, and this is verified by the testimony he offers showing that he was at one time a lieutenant in the Russian Army. He is not bombastic nor tiresome; simple and straightforward, but venomous as becomes one with such a cult. He has no conception of compromise and avers he will fight for the uplift of his countrymen, as long as he can make his voice heard or his hand to indicate.

He is particularly bitter against the Greek church, the predominating influence in Russia for keeping the masses in subjection to the autocratic rule, the force he claims, that is more invincible than the great bureau organized and maintained by the imperial princings lords and henchmen. The church there according to Mr. Markeson, was never instituted for the educated Russian; that favored individual has but little to do with it. It is an auxiliary of empire with an idyllic program for the submergence of the illiterate; this is the principal function of every ecclesiastic in the great dominions. To blind, and blast, and brutalize the vast horde of common people, in order that they may be more amenable for the dictates and policies that make for the wealth and comfort and peace of the ruling classes.

Mr. Markeson was in the Turko-Russian war in 1878 and he is also a veteran of the Spanish-American war, serving in both campaigns with honor, especially in the latter. He is a warm friend of America and looks to this country to furnish, in time, some expedient whereby his fellows in Russia shall be freed from the fearful condition that now beggar and prostitute them.

He talked interestingly of the late war and declares they did not fight at all after the war began. They were simply "gone through the motions." Their hearts are not in it.

"They are led like swine to slaughter, and like swine, will not resist," said he to the Plaindealer man. "Nor is this luke-warm status confined to men in the ranks. The military official world is almost in fragments born the same foul cause. The domination of petty superiority in office, or command, is destroying the army and in support of this," Mr. Markeson cites the numbers of generals in succeeding command at the front, their failures, disgraces and retirements.

And, in further proof, relates an incident that transpired in Nagasaki harbor when he was on his way to America with his regiment on the transport

"Thomas." While the transport "Thomas" was at anchor there, the Russian cruiser "Sarat" came in with 1,500 Russian troops aboard homeward bound from Odessa. In his American uniform (that of corporal) Mr. Markeson boarded the Russian and mingled with his fellows, asking and answering hundreds of questions. He soon discovered the existence of the unhappiest conditions and feelings among them and was told that the officers suffered and protested as they did. To prove this he approached some of the officers in command and verified the statement. All were bitterly disaffected and sick to the soul with the burden of a war they did not want. To prove the sincerity of the officials he sought permission to address the crew from the bridge of the ship, and this granted he made them the speech of his life. He made them understand first, his deep and entire sympathy with them in their great and small grievances, and then he drew for them a picture of American life, its freedom in the home and field of labor, in the political field, in the opportunities for education, self-support and all that goes to make for pride and safety and comfort and manhood. And he says they applauded him, not with the clapping of hands, nor with cheers and cries of approval, but with the silent and truthful approbation of tears. It was pitiful. But as an exposition of things as they are, he had no better instance to offer.

GOING BACK TO THE LAND OF CYCLONES

Mr. and Mrs. Pendleton Pilkington, of Cherryvale, Kas., and their sister, Mrs. N. E. Clark, of Parsons, Kas., who have been visiting friends and relatives in Portland and who later came to Roseburg and have been guests of their two brothers, Messrs. W. and B. Pilkington and niece, Mesdames A. C. Carty and E. E. Gallagher, report a fine time sight-seeing in the beautiful state of Oregon. They all say they would like to locate here if we could only furnish a nice house piped with natural gas such as the state of Kansas produces. We Oregonians are content with the nice wood and coal produced here. They will return home via San Francisco where they will make a short visit. At home they will likely have a grand reception by a cyclone or something nice of that sort, no doubt, and wish they were landing in Oregon instead of Kansas.

Thus remarked one of the party to the Plaindealer man.
