UNHAPPY POLAND.
Discontent Under Russian Rule Proves Frequent Uprisings.

Russian Poland, which has so often in the past been the scene of revolution and strife, is again in a state bordering on anarchy. The workmen are discontented with the conditions under which they labor, and the people in general are resentful of the efforts of the czar's government to Russinize their country and blot out all traces of its former existence as an independent nation. The disorder in Warsaw, the capital of the kingdom of Poland in the days when the Poles had an independent national government, has been especially difficult for the Russian authorities to control. The troops have been very brutal in suppressing the popular demonstrations. A few weeks since there was a fight between soldiers and workmen in a square of the city of Warsaw, in which many persons were killed and wounded, and the next morning the soldiers might have been seen engaged in gathering up the dead by the wagon load.

OLD WARSAW CHURCH, WHERE POLISH PATRIOTS MADE LAST STAND.

Warsaw has a population of about 800,000. Russia keeps a garrison of 30,000 soldiers there to overawe the population and prevent a recurrence of the revolutions and insurrections of the past. Since the dismemberment of Poland over 100 years ago the oppressed Poles have made several desperate attempts to regain their lost nationality, but failure has each time resulted. The picture shows the old church in Warsaw where the Polish patriots made their last hopeless stand in one of these revolts against Russia.

Never tell a boy in a deprecating tone of voice that he looks like his father. He can't help it.

A cooking school that would teach the young feminine idea to shoot biscuits and the like would do much to put the divorce lawyers out of business.

The Lord is supposed to look out for simple people, but the confidence man helps him look.

A man will forgive almost anything in a woman if she is pretty enough.

Be Thankful.

What! Nothing to be thankful for? Why, Rupert, how you talk! Be thankful for the street cars, lad; Your grandpa had to walk. Be thankful that you have a home And parents kind and true; Be thankful that they do not knock The stuffing out of you.

Be thankful you can lick that kid Who thinks he is a man And wallop him around the block— Provided that you can. Be thankful that you were not caught That time the other day You threw a brick and broke the big Plate glass across the way.

Be thankful that your ma and pa Don't know you smoke and swear. For if they did a worried look Perhaps you'd have to wear. Be thankful that the man who owns The watermelon patch Is old and lame and slow and so Is not much on the catch.

Just look around, and you will see Some things for giving thanks; Be grateful that the grindstone has Not half a dozen cranks. Be thankful that you are a boy And so can run and play. Because, you know, you might have been The girl across the way.

Ready to Pick.

"Where does rubber come from?"
"The rubber tree, of course."
"Is that right?"
"Sure."
"Then I suppose the big auto tires grow on the big trees, while the little bicycle cushions are the fruit of the bushes."

Cutting Out Business.

"She has scratched them off her calling list."
"What have they done to her?"
"Oh, nothing. But her husband doesn't owe them money any longer, and she feels she can select her friends."

Even In Those Days.

"Robinson Crusoe got his slave for nothing."
"I believe so."
"Must have been a sort of a bargain Friday."

All Off Then.

The cat is rated with nine lives. But eight of them don't fit. The moment that the sausage man gets pussy in his mitt.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Never judge a man by the stories he tells when he is trying to make an impression on a crowd of girls.

A new ice cream parlor is about as welcome to the young men of the neighborhood as a shower in haying time.

A girl doesn't mind getting tanned at a summer resort, but she does hate the shade she acquires sticking the family washing up over the line.

One way to tell whether a watermelon is ripe or not is to taste it.

A hen is as proud of a duck she has hatched as a woman is of a boy she has spanked.

Little does a person dream when going off on a vacation that the coming back will be the best part.
