Success Based Upon Merit. I have heard a story of a curious pass-sage between John Van Buren and his father, which is sufficiently characteris-tic to be true, although I should not like to vouch for its verity. The senious and Buren was staying at the old City Hotel with all his boys except Abra-ham. John, always indolent and lux-morning until the rest of the family had, insided breakfast and the table was cleared off. This necessitated special preparations for the loiterer, involving breakfast one functional expense. Mr. Van Buren remonstruted without effect, until the became impatient and gave peremptory orders that no extra breakfast should di usagenerally prompt at dinner.
