THE TRIUMPH OF PRINCIPLE. It should not be forgotten that prin ciples never die. They are not dependant upon the one who utters them for their validity. For example, to use a simple mathematical illustration, the whole is greater than a part. whether the fact is uttered by saint or sinner, statesman or convict. All truths are independent of human acceptance. They are selt-dependant and etermil. Man does not create them. Principles become the property of mankind by discovery, and he who rejects them thereby receives the punishment due to unfortunate dullness or to wilful adhesion to falsebood.

It follows from this general proposi tion that a cause is to be embraced solely for the truth or principle there is in it. A political party need not despair because of numerical defeat when it is founded on a correct principle. Mankind are so constituted that in the long run they reject error. Excitement, interest, partizan zeal, persistence in a wrong course, love of triumph, dread of defeat, ignorance, prejudice, may for a season deter mine the will of men to reject what is true in itself and to embrace a form of error. But there is a tendency in the human mind, a slow organic growth toward something higher and better, towards everlasting verity. Therefore, in all the affairs of the world, in art. literature, science, politics, after various conflicts the cause which contains the greater good triumphs. Thus by a slow process of elevation Providence is manifested in human history.

In the political conflict that is no going on among us, it is necessary to look for the principles at stake. On the one side, there are all the principles that have in the past constituted the soul of the Republican party. On the other side, there are absolutely no principles, there is merely organized antagonism to an administration. The truth, the justice, the political validity of Republican principles are admitted. And because a hostile party has ceased its opposition to principles, it is falaclously claimed that our principles are dead issues. Just as though the life of a principle depended upon hostility to it! Two and two do not cease to be four as soon as knaves and tools cease to dispute the fact. Republicans are carrying on the Government according to certain great principles of public policy. Those principles do not cease to be good, do not cease to be objects of affection and solicitude, simply because Democrats have ceased to make war upon them.

We are impudently told by Demo crats and Liberal orators and journalists that we have no business to recur to our party history. Its glorious record is part and parcel of is existance. Because it has done nobly in the past is a strong reason why it should be trusted in the future. Democrats pretended that this is the very reason why it should abdicate in favor of men who have all the good of their lives to do in the future. It is not singular that they should object to a revival of the past. Yet, because their past political record has been infamous, they claim the right to administer the Government in the future. Even allowing, for the sake of argument, that the issues of the past are dead, it does not logically and morally follow that the party whose dead issues have been humane, glorious and patriotic, should give place to the party whose dead issues have been inhuman, infamons and unpatriotic. According to the same doctrine, Jefferson Davis would make a President of the United States more zeaous for the preservation of the Union than General Grant. Again, according to the same doctrine, "Boss" Tweed would make an honester Secretary of the Treasury than Mr. Boutwell. These conclusions are all legitimate from the premises laid down by the opposing party. According to the verdict of universal history and all political experience, the party that is organized around the higher principal triumphs. Still more does a party embodying lotty principles with a noble record, triumph over a party with no principles at all, with a record that offends the moral sense of mankind. It would be contrary to experience to assert that the Republican party can under no circumstances be defeated. It may be beaten in some particular election by one of those accidents to which all parties are liable. It may be overthrown, however, only when some new party arises that has in it still more of truth, still higher principles. Until then it behoves every good citizen to adhere to the only or-ganization that at present promises good government and a consolidation of nobler liberty won by immense sac-
