DEVELOPMENT UNDER DIFFICULTIES

Since the failure of the traction freighting outfit to make good, the farmers of this section are feeling more keenly than ever the lack of adequate transportation facilities with which to get their grain to market. The traction road train project was the direct outgrowth of a crying need for some cheaper and quicker method of marketing this season's large crop than was afforded by the ordinary freight team method, and had it succeeded, it would have in a manner alleviated the conditions that exist. Its complete failure has thrown the farmers of the district back upon their own resources in getting their grain to market, and this is a slow and tedious process for all of them, while many are not prepared at all to freight their grain to the market at Shaniko.

Conditions during the present year strongly emphasize the enormous handicap under which the development of this section is proceeding. With wheat selling around ninety cents in the Portland market, the wheatgrowers of this section are not able to net themselves more than fifty cents per bushel for their grain, owing to the lack of rail transportation facilities. With a bumper crop and prices high, ideal conditions for the farmer ordinarily, this section loses all the benefits because Harriman won't and nobody else shall build a railroad into this territory. During the present year, with a wheat crop of more than a million bushels, the Madras country alone is paying a direct tribute of a quarter of a million dollars to this dog-in-the-manger policy by reason of the excessive cost of getting its grain to market. Indirectly it is paying more than that, for with proper transportation facilities the section would be producing from three to five million bushels of grain, instead of the million bushels it produced this year.

Years like this bring home to us the tremendously adverse conditions under which the development of this section proceeds, but they have another effect, too, which brightens the prospect for the future. Big crops demonstrate the country's worth, and the immense amount of tonnage in sight is waking up Capital to the possibilities of Central Oregon as a field for profitable railroad investment. The Harriman blockade, so long effective in keeping other interests out, is threatened from two sides, the Oregon Trunk Line from the north and the Mt. Hood road across the mountains having projected their lines into this territory, and the immediate future holds bright promise of a solution of the troublesome transportation problem.

SELF-HELP THE LAST RESORT

Prineville, after being without a railroad for 35 years, and after losing all confidence in the promises of Harriman to build into the interior, has started a movement to raise $150,000 bonus for an electric line from the Willamette Valley. Self help which should always be the first and foremost dependence of cities and communities has been adopted as the last forlorn hope of the interior.

Prineville can build an electric road from Eugene across the Cascades, if she will try. Millions of idle capital are waiting for just such opportunities, where the people show a willingness to help and where the traffic promises such rich returns.

The only aggravating feature of the construction of the electric line from Prineville to Eugene by the people would be the fact that Harriman's Southern Pacific would be the final beneficiary of the people's line, as it is the only outlet to the markets, both north or south.—Penelope, East Oregonian.

Harriman interests in Oregon.

The purpose of the present trip of Harriman officials into Central Oregon could not be learned, although it may be surmised that it has to do with the threatened invasion of this territory by other interests. The unwonted activity of the Harriman officials and surveyors in Central Oregon unquestionably means one of two things—either Harriman is going to build his long promised road at once, or he has a bad case of fright over the threatened invasion of his sacred precincts and is making a last desperate effort to drive the cork in tighter, to hold the country he has so long bottled up. This is Mr. Cotton's second trip into Central Oregon during the present summer, and although he has not many confidantes in this section, it is generally known that neither trip was undertaken as a pleasure jaunt.

NEW HOMESTEAD RULING

Officials of the local land office at The Dalles have been notified by the General Land Office of a new ruling by that department, affecting the commutation clause of the homestead law. We have not a copy of the circular at hand, but the gist of the new ruling is that hereafter an actual residence of fourteen months will be required in all commutations upon homestead entries, the ruling being effective on and after November 1. Heretofore homestead entrymen have been permitted to make commutation upon their entries at the end of the first fourteen months after filing, this fourteen months including six months of consecutive residence allowed by the department in which to establish residence upon the land, and an actual residence of only eight months following that period. But hereafter, all entrymen will be required to show an actual residence of fourteen months immediately preceding the proof, before the cash entry will be allowed. The ruling is a good one, and will correct abuses of the commutation clause of the homestead law.

There have been numerous reports regarding the traction freighting project, one persistent rumor being to the effect that another attempt would be made at an early date to operate the road train successfully between this place and Shaniko. So far as can be learned from the promoters of the enterprise, however, there is nothing to justify the hope that another trial will be made to operate it this season. The successful operation of the engine over the roads, without a great deal of work being done on them, was demonstrated to be impracticable by the trial trip made out from Shaniko, and the traction company has abandoned the project for this season. Whether or not the manufacturers of the traction outfit will take the matter up and attempt to demonstrate the feasibility of the project has not yet been learned.

COTTON IN CENTRAL OREGON
