 Fort Rock is a comparatively new settlement about 25 miles North by West from Silver Lake and a few miles East of what is known as the "horse ranch." Fort Rock takes its name from a somewhat circular form of volcanic rock jutting from the level plain a hundred feet or more in places and forming an inclosure resembling a fort. About six or eight acres are enclosed by the rock with an opening probably not more than 200 feet wide. There is a large area of farming and grazing land in that vicinity and it is said that water has been secured in wells by digging from 12 to 25 feet.
