The Cheapest Camp.

There lives hardly a boy who does bot hanker to build a camp-not necessarily in the woods, though that is fine, but somewhere out of doors, where he can "keep house" when occasion permits. In the case of many, however, there is difficulty both in the matter of knowledge as to how to build a camp, and also difficulty in arranging for the expense that would be incurred in the building of most of the boys' camps that are described. It may sound like a fairy tale when

I state that the camp I am going to describe is covered with paper. But walt a moment. It is the red, resinsized, heavy paper that comes in rolls, as shown in Fig. 1. Carpenters use this paper in their building operations, and the writer has used it to cover just such a little building as is herewith described, so he knows that it is perfectly feasible to make a camp in this way. The paper is waterproof, and so stout and strong that it can be laid over by a light framework and secured in place by careful handling. When in place, it seems to grow tougher and stronger by exposure to the

Begin the making of the camp by Irlving stakes into the ground in the way suggested in Fig. II., allowing the "You had a political debate in your two inner stakes at each end to extend district school building last Saturday night, Uncle Sime, I understand. pears in the biographical dictionary or ome current record of celebrities,

The response is, "Matthew," and the player scores a point, Matthew Simpson having been one of the most noted bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Then the leader asks the next player to take the Christian name, "Matthew," which has just been given, and couple with it a different surname to make the name of another celebrity. "Matthew Arnold" is suggested, and this player also scores a point.

To the third player a new surname is given. In brief, the old-numbered players have surnames to which to add Christian names, and each even-numbered player takes the Christian name given by his predecessor, and fits it with a new surname. For each success a point is scored.

But some persons "have a bad memory for names," as the saying is, and in this kind of a game fall far behind. In fairness to them, the leader, after each name has been completed, calls the roll for interesting facts about the celebrity, and the player who supplies a fact scores a point.

The principal of a public school devised the game of "Celebrities" after hearing one of his teachers speak of "James G. Whittier," and another dilate upon the oratory of "Darius Webster." He has taught the game to scholars who are not well-informed, as well as to the teachers who were sometimes careless, and has found that it interested all and did them good.

"Knowledge that is not accurate is not very useful," the principal says. But his game does more than promote accuracy; it introduces players to men and women who, heretofore, had been "less than a name," leads to the study of their lives, and thus provides the students with new examples, ideals and inspirations .--- Youth's Companion.

Shadowgraphs.

At an evening party shadowgraphs are great fun. They are something like the effect produced by those curious mirrors of which you have all heard, which, at any one's merely moving backward or forward in front of them will make him or her short and stout or tall and thin, according to where the person is sanding.

All you need to make shadow plctures is a sheet or any large plece of rather thin white cloth, and a strong light. Suspend the cloth from the celling and place behind it the light. Now try neceding from the screen and you will seem to be turning into a glant. If you move up nearer so that you are the same distance from the screen that the light is your outline will become distinct, and if you move up still nearer you will seem to have entirely disappeared. All sorts of funny po tions can be shown which all will enjoy, and a whole play may be acted in pantomime by the moving shadows.

Quite Too Too.

The Miller of the Dee, There dwelt a miller, hale and bold, Beside the River Dee; He wrought and sang from morn till night,

No lark more blithe than he ;. And this the burden of his song Forever used to be,

"I envy no man, no, not I, And no one envies me !"

"Thou'rt wrong, my friend," said old King Hal,

"As wrong as wrong can be; For could my heart be light as thine, I'd gladly change with thee. And tell me now what makes thee sing With voice so loud and free, While I am sad, though I'm the King, Beside the River Dee?"

The miller smilled and doffed his cap; "I earn my bread," quote he; "I love my wife, I love my friend, I love my children three. I owe no one I can not pay, I thank the River Dee, That turns the mill that grinds the corn To feed my babes and me !"

"Good friend," said Hal, and sighed the while,

"Farewell! and happy be! But say no more, if thou'dst be true, That no one envies thee. Thy mealy cap is worth my crown; Thy mill my kingdom's fee! Such men as thou are England's boast, Oh, miller of the Dee !" -Charles Mackay,

Chorus-

Say, darling, say, when I'm far away, Sometimes you may think of me, dear : Bright, sunny days will soon fade away, Remember what I say to be true, dear.

I'm off to the war, to the war I must go, To fight for my country and you, dear: But if I should fall, in vain I would call The blessings of my country and you, dear.

Chorus-

And when the war is o'er, to you I'll return;

Back to my country and you, dear. But should I be slain, you may seek in vain

Upon the battle-field you will find me, dear.

Each strip of paper can extend from the ground on one side up over the roof and down to the ground on the other side, thus giving no chance for the water to get in. But put on the end coverings before the roof, so that the upper edges of the end strips may lap over onto the roof, and be covered by the roof paper when this is put in place. This will make a tight joint. Over all edges of paper nall common laths, as shown in Fig. IV., which represents the camp finished, Instead of windows, make a doorway in each end in the way suggested in the cuts showing framing. Fit a light frame of narrow strips of board to each doorway and cover them with paper. "Strap" hinges can be put on the outside as shown, and wire hooks. Laths can be put around the edges of the doorway and around the edges of the doors. Select a dry, well-drained spot for the camp, and build according to instructions. Make the house of any size desired, but don't try too large a house at first. Make it of the right length and width to be covered by the paper, without cutting the latter. Canvas may also be used in place of the paper, but this is more expensive. The Game of "Celebrities."

Since biography is "history teaching by example," and since intelligent people are supposed to know something about the men and women who stand as representatives of the world's progress, it is always worth while to learn about them.

An easy and amusing way is to play "Celebrities," a game which is entirely home-made, and requires no equipment but a dictionary of biography, such as is found in any of the larger dictionaries, and a church year book, town report, telephone list, city directory, or almost any volume that contains a collection of names.

Enterprising Editor.

A stroke of journalistic enterprise that exceeds even Yankee inventiveness is reported by a traveler recently returned from France. He visited a small French village, and reports that when almost everybody was at work in the fields the local newspaper announced that in the busy season all the important news would be condensed in a single short paragraph, and that the rest of the sheet would be smeared with a fly-killing compound, instead of printer's ink.

In a brief article the editor explained his plan.

"In this way," he said, "we shall be able to give our readers appreciable advantages, which are : First, the possibility of learning all the news of the day in a few minutes; second, the means of reducing the plague of notsome insects which poison the countryside and disseminate many diseases."

Old Missouri State Road.

One of the oldest landmarks in this part of Missouri is the old Bloomington road, also known as the old State road. This road began in the eastern part of North Missouri, running west through Bloomington. It didn't run on section lines as the roads now run, but ran as the crow files. The highway was the main thoroughfare through North Missouri long before and after the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad was built and has a history not well known to the younger generation. Over this old time highway the early gold seekers traveled in ox wagons with their little earthly belongings, going to California and Oregon .- Brooklyn Ga-
