The Oregon Hub, published at Redmond by Will Walker, is the latest acquisition to newspaperdom in Crook County. The Hub shows careful editing and make-up. It deserves all the support the people of Redmond and vicinity can give it.

It is now surmised that Secretary Ballinger will soon resign. He may now think he can now quit with a clean bill of health, but if he does and leaves the field to Pinchot and Newell he will never recover from the attacks they will heap upon him. He is right, he knows he is right, and he had better stay right where he is and fight those two trouble-makers to a finish—their finish.—The Dalles Optimist.

OREGON'S EXPERIMENT

Oregonian

President Taft, in his luncheon speech in Portland, said of Oregon and its "system": "We look toward Oregon as an experimenter. We are willing to let you make the experiment and then we shall profit by the conclusion you, in your patriotic effort to elevate popular government, shall find it satisfactory."

It is an experiment such as no other state will repeat. No other commonwealth will suffer the monstrosity, Statement One, to be foisted on it. They are all "on to the game" taught by Oregon's plight, where they see Republicans, numbering two-thirds the voters, unable to represent the pride and power of the commonwealth in the United States Senate.

In citing wonderful things he had seen in his Western travels, the President remarked in a half-humorous vein: "There was only one thing that wasn't mentioned, that impresses itself today on me, and that is the wonderful crop of Senators, former and existing." Of course, the President was too polite to mean any particular reference to Oregon. He was speaking in general terms. It may be said that this state does not claim its experiment among its superior resources. It would rather mention its Tillamook cheese, its Hood River apples, its Rogue River pears, its chinook salmon, or its Mount Tabor strawberries.

THE LAND OF SURE RETURNS

Persons who desire to see the solitude of Oregon occupied by a happy and thriving population will be encouraged by the news that the Fall immigration promises to be heavy. The efforts to advertise the state, which the railroads and push clubs have made, are evidently yielding results. The dense ignorance of Easterners concerning Oregon has been enlightened somewhat and the dwellers in the benighted regions along the Atlantic and the Mississippi are beginning to flock to the land of promise. They are welcome. The more the merrier. Oregon needs them and they need Oregon. To many of these men it will be nothing short of a revelation to find how mild our climate is, how benignant and refreshing the rains are, how fertile the soil. The delightfulness of Oregon will be incredible to them until they settle here. Then they will wonder why they did not come long ago.

Strange as it may appear, it is nevertheless highly probable that the East knows less about Oregon today than it did sixty-five years ago. In those lively old times the country was agog with curiosity about the Pacific Coast. The Methodist and Congregationalists were preaching the Oregon mission to thrilling audiences. Whitman and Jason Lee were lecturing about the wonders of the Columbia and the Willamette. Congress was debating the Oregon question and war with England over the boundary was not unlikely. The whole country was full of interest in this far-off, romantic territory. But when gold was discovered the interest shifted to California, and has lodged there ever since.

It is only very recently that anything like a systematic effort has been made to revive the ancient, legitimate bent of the Middle Westerner to push on to Oregon. The beauties and allurements of the state were almost forgotten. Its desirability for the home-maker had faded from recollection.

To make men keenly eager to come to Oregon it is only necessary to tell them the sober truth. No exaggeration is required. One need not draw on his imagination at all. The plain, unvarnished statement that a farmer can clear between $500 and $1000 a year from one acre of apple or pears is enough to set everybody's ears tingling in the East. In a region where, by strenuous toil late and early, year in and year out, a man can no more than eke a bare subsistence from a quarter section of land, of course, a profit of $500 from a single acre sounds portentous. The New England farmer, stumbling about among the stones on his barren hillside, can hardly believe it possible.

But it is possible. Nay, it is commonplace. It is achieved so frequently in Oregon that many of our farmers are no more surprised by a profit of $500 an acre from fruit than the Kansas man is to make $10 from corn. The big returns go to the man who does his own work and applies industry and brains to it. Even in Oregon it takes intelligent effort to make money, but given the effort and the intelligence, there is no state in the Union where the reward is more and abundant and more sure.—Oregonian.
