INDUSTRY IS PREVALENT

The tide of industry which has struck Madras this Fall has equalled, if not exceeded, the expectations of the most sanguine, and the man without employment now cannot be hired to work. Industry is seen everywhere! New buildings are being erected; storekeepers are working almost night and day; stages loaded with passengers, coming and going; hotel hardly able to accommodate the increasing travel; immense freight outfits busier than ever bringing in supplies for a multitude of new settlers; with railroad construction both North and South of town, presents a kaleidoscope array of activity never before seen in this section, and this activity will increase as railroad construction nears Central Oregon.

This section is now coming to the inheritance which has so long been withheld because of inadequate transportation, and the satisfying evidence that this transportation is soon to be had, has turned toward the interior the attention of homeseekers, investors and speculators, such as no other event would have done. Lands are daily changing hands at prices, which, five or six years back would have seemed preposterous. When the first settlers invaded these sagebrush plains, it was a common saying among the stockmen along the creeks that in four or five years they would buy out these farmers for a fourth what their lands cost them. How futile their prophecy! But, in the next five or six years, property will double and triple in value.

Central Oregon is today the largest and most promising of Uncle Sam's domain not already pre-empted by the homesteader, and the man who wishes to acquire a farm, a home, and an independence, would better turn his attention to this jewel in the rough.

This is the hour of opportunity, and Oregon's inland empire is the opportunity of the hour.

COOK AND PEARY AGAIN

It is not likely that much weight will attach to the testimony of the Eskimos who are said to have gone with Cook to the Pole. Charity requires us to suppose that they know what they are talking about when they tell one tale today and its opposite tomorrow, but it does not require us to veer with them. Possibly they might be induced in consideration of a tallow candle to aver that John Smith went to the Pole before Cook. In making up our minds upon the merits of the controversy we may set the Eskimos aside.

Cook's veracity, in the absence of reliable witnesses, will ultimately be established or impeached by the scientific observations he can produce. If he reached the pole he naturally must have recorded what he saw as well as the incidents of the trip. From these data men of learning will in due time deduce their conclusions and the question of Cook's truthfulness must remain in abeyance until that is done. Precisely the same thing must be said of Peary. His witnesses are not an atom more respectable than Cook's, and it he ever proves that he reached the Pole he must do it by exhibiting the observations he made. Even then demonstration will not be conclusive, since appropriate observations could be invested easily enough. Of course the presumption is that neither explorer would invent them, but still he might, and if one would, why not an other?

SEATTLE EXPOSITION A TRIUMPH

Portland Telegram
The Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at Seattle has closed, and, in events of this order, a second triumph is recorded for the Pacific Northwest. The Seattle exposition was a splendid success, both artistically and financially. The attendance was all that could be desired; the beauty of the exposition, as a whole, the excellence of the exhibits and the character of its entertainment, was gratifying. With the curtain rung down on this second great show of the Northwest, there is general felicity and congratulations in which Portland people join.

Public-spirited men and women of this city and of this region have looked upon the Seattle Exposition as of local import and value. Their attitude toward the enterprise has been that which Seattle people assumed during the Lewis and Clark Fair. It has been a case of reciprocity that has been beneficial on both sides and to all concerned. Portland was the pioneer in the business, and the success of its enterprise, and the advertisement which it afforded for the subsequent event, was of no mean value. There is no properly constituted Portland person who is not pleased that the first event thus helped the second.

It has been notable, too, that the Portland papers, without exception, and the papers of the state of Oregon generally, have done whatever was possible to help the good work at Seattle along. This aid has been recognized and appreciated by the Exposition people, as exemplified by a recent letter received by the Telegram from James A. Wood, director of exploitation. We quote a paragraph, which will suffice:

"With the close of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition and the end of our work of exploitation and publicity, I want to assure you of my personal appreciation of the contribution your paper has made toward our success. No matter how complete and interesting the exposition has been, it could not have been a success without the publicity which has been given it by you and the owners and editors of the Pacific Northwest." This is a graceful acknowledgement of service we have tried to render, and of the Pacific Northwest sentiment toward the Seattle Exposition as generally expressed. The exposition has been a benefit to every legitimate interest in this entire region.

Mrs. Henry Bachman of Dubuque, Iowa, a former resident of this section, arrived in Madras yesterday and expects to remain for some time visiting relatives and friends.
