PINCHOT'S INFERENCES

Oregonian

The conspiracy against Secretary Ballinger, led by Forester Pinchot, is one of the worst things of the kind ever present ed in our public affairs. Look fairly at the developments of yesterday.

With reference to the claim that Mr. Ballinger had deceived Gross claims for losses unthe President concerning a decision by the Comptroller of the Treasury, Mr. Pinchot admitted that Mr. Ballinger's written statement to the President was a fair one and the documents he submitted were all that probably bore on the case. He insisted, however, that there was "the unavoidable inference that Mr. Ballinger had commucated in some other way with the President."

Whose inference? That of Pinchot alone. Observe further how this "unavoidable inference that Ballinger had communicat ed in some other way with the President" accuses not only Ballinger, but the President himself of deception and lying.

. Again, it was brought out in the inquiry, from Pinchot's testimony, that the co operative agreement with the Forest Service, which Ballinger discontinued, was not the usual arrangement whereby one department lends its employers temporarily to another, but provided that employes of the Interior Depart ment should be under the exclusive control and invisalization of said tracts as have not been heretofore finally restored, and are not other size control and invisalization of said tracts as have not been heretofore finally restored, and are not other wish drawn. Teserved, or appropriated wise withdrawn, reserved, or appropriated. sive control and jurisdiction of the Forester.

That is, the Secretary of the Interior was not to be chief of his own department, but Mr. Pinchot asserted his right to be chief-Pinchot insisting that the employes of the Interior Depart ment were to be under his own jurisdiction and control. What self respecting official, at the head of a department, could permit it? Because Ballinger, would not submit to this, Pinchot de-Hounces him as an enemy of the public interests. The country is rapidly getting knowledge of the inside of this business.
