

LEWIS M'CALLISTER KILLED ON OCHOCO

Shot by Man Named
Robertstein

SELF-DEFENSE IS CLAIMED

Quarrel Arising Over Water Rights
Results Fatally for Pioneer
Miner.

Lewis McCallister was shot and killed Tuesday forenoon at 10 o'clock at the Ochoco mines by a man named Robertstein in a quarrel said to have resulted from disputes over water rights.

According to the statements made by Robertstein, McCallister was working on the water ditch that morning, and in company with a woman whom Robertstein claims to be his sister the latter went out on the works. Robertstein and McCallister had some angry words and Robertstein claims that McCallister threw a shovel at him. Then Robertstein drew a pistol and according to his statement first shot McCallister through the arm. McCallister started to run from him and he shot him again in the back. McCallister was on a steep hillside and rolled down the mountain for a considerable distance, dying a few minutes later.

A coroner's inquest was held Tuesday and the verdict of the coroner's jury was that McCallister came to his death from a gunshot wound at the hands of Robertstein, in self-defense.

Robertstein, however, has been arrested and will be held to answer to a charge for murder.

Lewis McCallister was well known throughout the country, being one of the early pioneers. He had been engaged in mining on the Ochoco, near where he was killed, for the past 30 years, and is said to have had the prior water rights on the creek over which the quarrel arose.

Lewis McCallister was 58 years old and unmarried. He is survived by two brothers, one of these being T. F. McCallister, and three sisters. The funeral will be held at Prineville today.

Dedicated May 28

The new Christian church erected at Culver Junction by Evangelists Gregg and Webb will be dedicated May 28th. A county convention of all the members of the Christian church will be held at the same time. C. F. Swander, state secretary, will be present. A basket dinner will be served. A general invitation is extended.

The Brooch

By DONALD MACKNIGHT

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

During the war between King Charles I. and his parliament two English families, the Vincents and the Traverses, were living on adjacent estates. Young Egbert Travers and Angela Vincent played together as children; then when the young Cavaliers were leaving their homes to support the king and Egbert marched to the war the parting made them sensible of the fact that they were lovers. Over the hedge that separated the two estates they plighted their troth, and the young lover dashed away thinking of the day when, the Puritans having been made to know their place and the authority of the king having been fully re-established, he would return to take up the pleasant life he had thus far led, made far happier by his union with Angela.

But, as under the struggle of 1861 to 1865 in America there lay, unrecognized at the time, the principle of civil liberty, so under that in England there was a principle of constitutional government. Travers was fighting for the king as an uncontrolled power, while his enemies were fighting for the king as he is today—a mere representative head of the government. The latter cause triumphed, the king was beheaded, and those who supported him, many of them deprived of their estates, found themselves without the means of subsistence.

Sir Edward Vincent, who espoused the parliamentary cause, had fallen at the battle of Marston Moor, and his wife had died during the struggle, leaving the Lady Angela an orphan. The Travers estate was confiscated, and Egbert Travers, instead of returning to his home, as he had anticipated when he set out to fight for the king, found himself penniless and without a roof over his head. An aunt of Angela's had taken what funds she could get together and gone to Holland. Angela decided to join this her only relative and remain with her till England became more settled under the sway of the parliament and the protectorate of Oliver Cromwell.

One evening when traveling toward the coast Angela heard a shot, the coach came to a stop, and a man on horseback appeared at the window, thrusting in one of those cumbersome implements with a flintlock which in those days they considered a pistol. A yellow strip of cloud reflecting the light of the setting sun shone on the man's face, while the features of the lady were concealed from him.

"I'll trouble you for your purse," he said.

The lady handed him a silk purse well filled.

"And now your jewels." She removed a brooch from her throat and gave him that too. This seemed to satisfy him, and he told the coachman to drive on, but immediately stopped him to ask:

"Are you for the king or the parliament?"

"My father died for the parliament; my betrothed fought for the king!"

The highwayman straightway thrust his hand into his pocket, took out the purse and tossed it back into the carriage.

"It's only the cursed Roundheads," he said, "whom we force to give us food while we wait for the return of King Charlie."

He was feeling for the brooch when she stopped him.

"Keep it," she said, "for a remembrance. If I mistake not, you are one of those young men who, having lost your possessions in defense of the king, have taken to the road. The day may come when we shall meet again. If so, the brooch may be a means of recognition."

The highwayman lifted his hat, thanked the lady for her gift and signified to the coachman that he might drive on.

King Charles II. was entering London amid great rejoicings. A carriage was standing by the curb in the street where the royal procession must pass. When the king had gone by a young man in the cavalcade, seeing a face in the carriage, reined in, crying:

"Angela!"

"The last time you were at my carriage window it was for a very different purpose," she replied.

"What mean you, sweetheart?"

"Sweetheart, indeed! You robbed me."

"What, of your heart?"

"Of my heart, forsooth! Of my purse."

The young man looked confused.

"We must needs do something after Naseby," he said, hanging his head, "but I surely never robbed you, Angela."

"You have a brooch a lady gave you?"

"A brooch! Yes, I have a brooch."

"I gave it to you, saying that some day it might be a means of recognition."

His face turned scarlet. The girl clapped her hands in great glee.

"Come," she said, "mayhap you have been wearing it next your heart, thinking it to be the gift of some fair dame other than your betrothed."

"Indeed I have kept it near my heart!" he admitted. "Here it is."

And he produced it.

The estates of these young people came again into their possession, among the descendants of Egbert and Angela is the brooch of which Angela was robbed.

CENTRAL OREGON CLUBS TO UNITE

Meeting of Delegates to Be Held in Prineville

A call has been issued from the Prineville Commercial club for a meeting of delegates from organizations in Central Oregon in that city June 30 and July 1, for the formation of a Central Oregon Development League. The Oregon Development League, which is composed of all the clubs in the state is aiding in the move.

"The value of the smaller development league," said Secretary C. C. Chapman, of the Oregon Development League, "is that each operates in its own section and ever so much more good will result from Central being organized as a unit. A separate league will give that territory an entity that never would be received by the individual communities. The work of the central organization will supplement that done by each unit on its own behalf."

Cities in Cook, Wheeler, Grant, Harney and the north half of Lake and Klamath counties will be eligible to membership in the proposed league. Central Oregon is taking an interest in the matter and it is expected there will be a large attendance at the Prineville meeting.

REDMOND EXPECTS TRAINS JULY 15

Material for Crooked River Bridge
Will Soon Arrive

The latest information regarding the probable arrival of Oregon Trunk trains into Redmond has been obtained from Mayor Jones who was in Portland last week and conferred with Ex-President Stevens of the Oregon Trunk, and Chief Engineer Budd of the same road. Mr. Jones stated to a representative of The Spokesman that the above gentlemen told him that the material for the railroad bridge across Crooked river would be on the ground ready for erection by the 15th of this month, and would be completed between the 4th and 10th of July, and that trains would be running into Redmond not later than July 15th.

The delay in building the Crooked river bridge has been occasioned by the slowness of the manufacturers at Pittsburg, but they are now working under hurry-up orders, and the above railroad officials assured Mayor Jones that Redmond would be sure to see trains into this city on the date mentioned above.

It is to be hoped that the railroad men have not made a mistake in their calculations, and that the Oregon Trunk Line will have their trains running here by the middle of July—in time to have the postponed 4th of July celebration held some time during the month of July to commemorate the arrival of the iron horse into Redmond and the Redmond district.—Spokesman.
