GASOLINE HEATED BROODER.

One Holding Two Hundred Chicks May Be Made by Any Farmer For $36.60.

A gasoline, heated colony brooder like the one pictured here, holding 200 chickens, can be made complete, including labor, at a cost of $36.60, or 18.3 cents per chicken, says the Country Gentleman. The house is eight feet square, inside floor measure, and six feet six inches high. The floor sills are of 2 by 12 inch stock cut eight feet long. An opening 91/2 by 121/2 inches must be cut in the rear sill to admit the burner box.

The floor should, if the house is to be used in winter, be double. In building the subfloor use rough, cheap lumber and lay diagonally to stiffen the building; then over a layer of building paper the finished top floor is laid, which should be of a good grade of matched and planed lumber.

The studs are now put up. These, together with the plates and rafters, are made of 2 by 2 inch clear hemlock stock. The studs are placed flush with the outer edge of the floor. The raft-Not Ceal Land ers are nailed to the ridgeboard before putting them in place, and then the boarding is put on. The boards are put on horizontally when the house is covered with paper and are placed to overlap the floor four inches. The building is inclosed with seven-eighths inch matched siding, planed on one side, which is turned in. The boards for the sides and roof are cut in eight foot lengths and the ends boarded vertically, thus using sixteen foot stock without waste.

The chick outlet is made through a trapdoor cut in the floor at the edge of the front runner and at the outer edge of a middle 2 by 4 inch joist. A runway with cleats, supported at the upper end of the 2 by 4 joist, leads to the ground at the edge of the house. The back of this runway is closed with boards to keep the chicks out from under the house.

No Excuse For Ignorance. An aged farmer at an extension school of agriculture recently said: "I am glad to be able to learn so much about farming, but it makes me said to think that it comes too late in life to do me any good. If I had only these things years ago I would the second to make things in the second to make the second the second things were ago I would the second the second things were ago I would the second things were ago I would the second things were ago I would the second that the second the second that the second the second that t have avoided so many mistakes and done so much better."

It may be sad to contemplate bene fits that come too late, but it is sadder still to think of the young men who do not try to avail themselves of knowledge that is placed before them. There is no longer any valid excuse for ignorance of the fundamental principles of farming.

Agricultural experiment stations, extension schools, institutes, bulletins and papers are within reach of every farmer in the land who really wants
