TAYLOR FLAYED JONES.

And Then, to Get Square, the Revivalist Told a Story.

Here is a well authenticated story of Sam P. Jones, revivalist and lecturer: Jones and ex-Governor Bob Taylor, now a United States senator from Tennessee, seldom met professionally in public. They were two such amazingly good drawing cards that few Chautauqua managements ever felt able to afford both of them in one day. However, one management made the plunge, and the two witty southerners found themselves on the same plat-

Taylor introduced Jones. He flayed Jones unmercifully, leaving little cuticle on him. The crowd laughed heartily and waited for Jones to take his re-

Jones arose. He was always cool as ice. This time was no exception. The andience held its collective breath. The scathing was about to begin.

Jones, however, said nothing to indi rate that he had even heard what Tay lor had said. The crowd felt that at last Jones was overmatched. He de livered his lecture and made the usual hit. Yet there was much surprise that he had not replied to Taylor

Just as Jones finished his set talk he turned and looked at Taylor. Then he drawled out, with a jerk of his thumb toward Taylor:

'Whenever I see that man anywheh I'm reminded of a little dawg I used to know down in Gawgy. That dawg lived close to the railroad track, and every evening when the fast express train went shooting through that little dawg ran out and tried to eat that train. Every night he would seem to say: 'Last night I didn't get it, but I've figured out since why it was. I'll get it this time. I'm just so hungry for an express train? Everybody around there knew that dawg would be killed some time by that train. Bound to. Couldn't wanted to investigate them they

"One hot summeh evening that train came along fasteh than eveh. It was just one big, noisy cloud of dust. That little dawg ran out as usual and ran along by the tracks. He was sucked in by the draft from the train and disappeared under the trucks. Everybody mittee: C. F. Owen, the chairsaid: 'Then he went-fool dawg! We always knew he'd get it. Now he's killed, all right."

"But when that train had gone theh came that little dawg trotting back up the track. The train badn't killed him at all-only made a bobtailer of him."

Presently the audience began to see the joke in sections, and before long it was in a scream of laughter.-Strickland W. Gillflan in Chicago News,

He Got Even.

Justus Miles Forman once in writing a story for Harper's Magazine used the name of an artist friend for the character of a chap who fell in love with a peasant girl in the Milanese. "It made all his friends roar with glee," sald Mr. Forman. "But he got twenty-four sheet poster for a musical comedy. There was a lady, the star, stepping out of a stage door and a long line of Johnnies waiting for her with silly smirks and bunches of violets. And every Johnnie was a portrait of me."

A Witty Retort.

As is generally the case with people ing, a conceited drummer talked a cheese was served it was of a decided "lively" brand, much to the delight of the irrepressible. He attacked it with son-slaying them by the thousand!"

"Yes." replied a quick witted diner at the end of the table, "and with the same weapon too!"

Painfully Polite.

A Washington trolley car was getrushing from opposite sides of the street to greet each other, met right in the middle of the car truck and in front of the car. There the two stopped and began to tak. The car stopped, too, but the women did not appear to realize that it was there. Certain of the passengers, whose heads were immediately thrust out of the windows to ascertain what the trouble was, began to make sarcastic remarks. but the two women heeded them not.

Finally the motorman showed that he had a saving sense of humor. Leaning over the dashboard, he inquired in the gentlest of tones:

"Pardon me, ladies, but shall I get you a couple of chairs?"-Lippincott's.
