Rev. C. B. Hysom will preach A FRENCH HOSPITAL SHIP.

It For Medical Aid.

Every year about the middle of May the French hospital ship St. Francois d'Assise, an auxiliary vessel of about 500 tons, appears on the Grand banks, With St. Pierre as a base she cruises all summer to the neighboring banks, giving medical and surgical aid to all fishermen in need of it, without regard to the flag which flies over them. "American fishermen share in this relief to a very great extent," declares Thomas W. Salmon in Survey, "for on some of the banks visited by the St. Francois d'Assise they outnumber the French. Last summer 627 fishing vessels were spoken by this hospital ship and 251 fishermen were given medical or surgical aid. In September the hospital ship goes back to France, carrying with her those fishermen who have not already recovered and been returned to their vessels,

"The American fisherman's only chance to obtain medical aid on Banquereau, St. Pierre bank and the Grand banks is when this hospital ship, maintained by charity and by a small grant from the French government, makes her summer visits to the fishing grounds. At other times on these banks and at all times on the banks which lie nearer home no medical aid whatever is available in time of need."

The Smiles Faded.

A pretty American girl traveling in England was sorely tried by the annoyances and stares to which she was subjected on account of her American "peculiarities." She went into a shoe shop in London to buy a pair of shoes, and the clerk tried on innumerable pairs of veritable "bonts," as she called them, much to the amusement of two Englishwomen customers seated near by, who regarded her through their "starers" as if she were some strange animal in a menagerie.

Finally the clerk said apologetically: "We 'aven't anything narrow enough for you, miss. You see, miss, our ladies have wider feet because they walk so much, miss.' The two Englishwomen smiled with the air of superiority that she had met for so long, and she felt she could stand it no longer. "Do they walk on their hands, too?" she flashed out.
