Testing for Gold at the Lower Bridge

Though the gold excitement at Lower Bridge died away some time ago it now develops that the interest of capitalists has not flagged. Saturday, a machine taken from Terrebonne to the scene of the finds near the bridge for the purpose of making further tests of the black gold bearing sand in that locality. The possibility is believed to be strong that these sands can be so worked as to produce gold in paying quantities. At any rate certain capitalists, represented by a Portland man named Stevens, have faith enough in the prospect that they now have men on the ground investigating. This entire country is underlaid with a black sand similar to that which at Lower Bridge contains traces of gold. Whether the sand can be made to produce precious metal in paying quantities and whether the sand underlaying the entire country contains gold is what these capitalists now propose to determine—Oregon Hub.
