HAUNTED BY COUNTERPART

An Apparent Mystery That Was Simply Explained.

To see oneself in a mirror, an exact counterpart, the same hair, eyes, features—this is nothing. We see it a hundred times a day. But to see oneself independent of reflection, making different movements, going and coming, sitting, standing, while we are still—this is terrible.

I was standing one morning in my office on the tenth floor of a skyscraper looking out of a window. I remember that I had my hands in my pockets. Suddenly I was startled to see another me standing in a window of an opposite building. The figure was up one story higher. He had his hands in his pockets and wore glasses. I also wear glasses. He had his beard trimmed to a point; so had I. His nose was a trifle bent to the left; so is mine.

My first emotion was surprise, my second terror. I had been under treatment for nervous troubles, but this was several months before. Were my sufferings about to return under a new form? Was this hallucination? Had my brain become affected? I shrank back from the window and into a chair.

Summoning all my fortitude, I looked again. The figure had disappeared. I explained nothing, but immediately went out. Calling a cab, I directed the driver to take me to my physician. I recounted what had occurred, and after endeavoring to reassure me he gave me a quieting mixture and told me to fix my mind on my business.

It was some time before I dared go to the window again, but after going there several times without seeing my double I made up my mind that I was all right again and was beginning to cease thinking of the matter when one day I walked to the window and just as I reached it my double reached his own window. Our eyes met. Both started back, I with a wildly beating heart, my counterpart with a look of unutterable surprise. I hastily left the office and the next day was on a steamer bound for Southampton, England.

I remained abroad two years. I would not have returned even then had I not received notice from my attorney that I was needed in the settlement of my father's estate. I had had trouble from the first, for my father and mother had separated when I was but a year old, and this naturally led to complications. I had remained with my father, who, I always understood, had what there was to bequeath. My attorneys did not inform me as to the nature of this last complication, only intimating that he needed my presence at once. I sailed for New York and on arrival called at the office of Mr. Hazleton, who had summoned me. That there was something of importance on his mind was evident. He looked me all over as if he had never seen me before, then stood, still looking at me, without saying anything.

"Well, what is it?" I asked.
"Did you ever hear that your mother left property?" he asked.

"No."
"Or that she had an interest in your father's estate?"
"No. My mother died before my father."

"There is a piece of property which we must sell before settling the estate. It was owned jointly by your father and mother. At any rate, it needs the signature of the heirs of both."

"Very well. Am I not the heir of both?"
"Come here tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock. I shall want your signature."
"Explains."

"Tomorrow at 9 o'clock," he repeated and went into his private office. At the appointed hour I was at Mr. Hazleton's office and was told to wait in an anteroom. Presently the door opened, and I was ushered into the main room. At the same moment a door opposite me opened, and a man advanced into the room I had entered. Horror of horrors, he was my double!

We stood looking at each other like the two Dromios, he in wonder, I in terror.
"Oh, heavens!" I moaned. "It has come back to me!"

"Gentlemen," said Mr. Hazleton, "I need the signature of both of you to a deed. You are twin brothers."
"Twin brothers!" we exclaimed in a breath.

"Yes. When your father and mother separated your father took one, your mother the other. It was agreed between them that each child should be kept in ignorance of the other."

The relief—the finding of a brother, a twin brother, of whose existence I had been in ignorance—was a delight that can only be understood by experience. It did not require that we should have been brought up together to feel that strong mutual drawing always to be found in children of a single birth. We advanced, embraced and cried simultaneously:
"You are?"
"Max."
"Mark."

I was Max, and he was Mark. No twins ever more clearly resembled each other, and Mr. Hazleton, with a lawyer's instinct, seized a pen and scratched our respective names on our cuffs to preserve the identity of each. My brother on seeing me at my window had been similarly affected as I. Even the pleasure of finding one another has not to this day obliterated from either the horror of encountering a double.

PORTLAND PROMOTES BIG PRODUCT SHOW

Exhibit Similar to Eastern Land Shows to be Held During Winter

Portland, Ore., July 2.—Instead of an apple show, Portland will hold a land show this winter that will be the first of its kind in the Pacific Northwest. It is hoped to make it an annual event rivaling in interest the big land shows of the East and Middle West. November or December will probably be the time for holding the show and it is planned to have it last two weeks. In scope it will cover the entire Pacific Northwest and all the states included in this territory will be asked to co-operate and send exhibits.

It is desired to have every product of the soil assembled here at that time. Commercial bodies will be interested and it is hoped to develop this event into an annual attraction that will appeal to people throughout the whole country who may be attracted to the vacant lands of the Northwest states. The show project has the support of the Oregon Development League and the chief organizations of Portland and the state.

VALUABLE TIMBER IN CENTRAL OREGON

Portland Lumberman Says Supply Will Last for Over Two Centuries

If all the yellow pine and sugar pine lumber used in Portland buildings were cut from the privately owned forests of Lake, Crook and Klamath counties, it would require 100 years to exhaust the supply. After the timber owned by individuals and corporations in these counties is exhausted there will be as much more left standing in the government forest reserves. The pine in these counties would build a string of six-room bungalows from Portland to San Francisco, and the same species of timber in Wheeler, Grant and North Harney counties would build another line of cottages from Portland to the boundary line of Montana.

Small mills have been pecking away at the forests of Central Oregon for more than 20 years, but they have not made a dent. "It's like trying to undermine the pyramids by using a pen-knife," said one of Portland's lumbermen who has interests in North Lake county. "The great-grandchildren of our grandchildren will make boxes from Lake county pine and then there will be timber left."

It isn't the dense, tangled thicket found on the Pacific Slope that is seen in a ride through the timber of Crook, Lake and Klamath counties. There is no impenetrable tangle of underbrush, no clumps of thickly-grown trees or poles between which a team cannot be driven. Instead there is a vast natural park, where giant pines, straight as an arrow, tower in the thin atmosphere until they seem to almost sweep the blue dome. They appear to have been scattered for a great park. At intervals rugged lava beds jut from the earth and tower almost to the tree tops and in places there are congealed lava flows stretching for ten miles through the woods.

"Yellow pine of Central Oregon," says C. W. Embody, "will cut a big figure in the markets of this Coast as soon as that region is better supplied with transportation facilities."—Oregonian.

BOARD OF REGENTS IN ANNUAL SESSION

New Instructors Chosen for University of Oregon and New Departments Added

University of Oregon, Eugene Oregon., June 19.—In the annual meeting of the Board of Regents of the University of Oregon, held yesterday in President Campbell's office, the Board went on record as promising to turn back into the treasury the $500,000 granted it by the legislature in the last session, providing that the court annulled the referendum petitions as fraudulent in case the people of the state voted favorably on the proposed bill, providing for one Board of Regents and millage support for the University and the Agricultural College. Also, they voted funds for the establishment of a Department of Journalism at the University, and elected Miss Ruth Guppy, of Tacoma, a graduate of the University of Michigan, as Dean of Women. The position of Dean of Women has not been filled since the resignation of Dr. Luella Clay Carson, four years ago, to accept the presidency of Mills College.

One of the most important acts of the Board was to select Dr. George Rebec, formerly of the University of Michigan, as head of the Department of Education at the University. Dr. Rebec resigned his position in the University of Michigan two years ago on account of ill health, and moved to a farm near Medford. R. W. Prescott, of Baker, now secretary to President Campbell, was made an assistant in the department of public speaking, and Miss Mabel Holmes Parsons, of Medford, was elected an assistant in the Department of Rhetoric, and Dr. William Macky Smith, of Lafayette College, was chosen as assistant professor of mathematics.
