Temperate Habits of President Johnson

son.

The following letter from B. B. French, Esq., is published in the Washington Intelligencer, to the editors of which it was addressed:

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23, 1867.

I have just read, with exceeding regret, a statement that Hon. Mr. Price, in some remarks on temperance recently made by him, spoke of President Johnson as a drunkard.

I feel it to be a duty that I owe, not only to the President but to the community, to say, that probably no person has had a better opportunity, from April 1865, to this time, to judge the habits of the President than I have. As Commissioner of Public Buildings, duty required that I should visit the President's house almost daily, and no week passed when I did not have personal interview with President Johnson. I have seen him at all hours in the day—in his office, in his sleeping-room and in the reception room—and never have I seen him in the least under the influence of strong drink, nor did I ever see him taste any but once, and then, at their urgent solicitation, he poured into a glass perhaps half a tablespoonful, and drank in company with the rest.

I was with him throughout his journey to Boston, and I saw him in places where intoxicating liquor was abundant, but he followed strictly the injunction, "touch not, taste not, handle not," so far as my observation extended.

I sincerely believe Andrew Johnson to be as temperate a man in all his habits as any man in the United States.

Hon. Mr. Price is not the only man who has been misled by false statements, as I well know from the questions that have often been put to me when visiting, New England friends: Respectfully yours,
B. B. FRENCH.

Keep Out of Debt.

Horace Greeley, in his "Recollections of a Busy Life," now being published in the New York Ledger, says in a late number:

"If it be suggested that my whole indebtedness was at no time more than $5,000 to $8,000, I have only to say that $1,000 of debt is ruin to him who keenly feels his obligation to fulfill every engagement, yet is utterly without the means of so doing, and who finds himself dragged each week a little deeper into hopeless insolvency. To be hungry, ragged and penniless is not pleasant; but this is nothing to the horror of bankruptcy. All the wealth of the Rothschilds would be a poor recompense for a five years' consciousness that you had taken the money or property of trusting friends, promising to return or repay it when required, and had betrayed their confidence through insolvency. I dwell on this point, for I would deter others from entering that place of torment. Half the young men in the country, with many old enough to know better, would go into business—that is into debt to-morrow if they could. Most poor men are so ignorant as to envy the merchant or manufacturer whose life is an incessant struggle with pecuniary difficulties, who is driven into constant 'shaming,' and who from month to month, barely evades that insolvency which sooner or later overtakes most men in business, so that it has been computed that but one in twenty achieves at pecuniary success. For my own part—and I speak from a sad experience—I would rather be a convict in the State Prison, or a slave in a rice swamp, than to pass through life under the harrow of debt. Let no young man misjudge himself unfortunate, or truly poor, so long as he has the full use of his limbs and faculties, and is substantially free from debt, hunger, cold, rags, hard-work, contempt, suspicion, unjust reproach, are disagreeable, but debt is infinitely worse than them all. And, if it had pleased God to have spared either or all my sons to be the support and solace of declining years, the lesson which I would have most earnestly sought to impress upon them is 'Never run in debt.' Avoid pecuniary obligation as you would pestilence and famine. If you have but fifty cents, and can get no more for a week, buy a peck of corn, parch it and live on it, rather than owe any man a dollar! Of course, I know that some men must do business, that involves risks, and must often give notes and other obligations, and I do not consider himself really in debt who can lay his hands directly on the means of paying, at some little sacrifice, all he owes; I speak of real debt—that which involves risk or sacrifice on the one side, obligation and dependence on the other—and I say I am all such let every youth humbly pray God to deliver him evermore.

The ethnologist of the COURIER tries to convince a contemporary that "God made monkeys and donkeys." Send him a copy of the last COURIER, and if he don't acknowledge your proposition true, call him a fool.—Sentinel.

There are exceptions to all rules. The Devil had control of your "make" up. Language which we are obliged to omit would be hardly feasible in a bawdy-house.—Unionist.

Rough Photograph of Washington

Notables.

"Bueno Buro," the Washington correspondent of the New York Citizen, thus describes some of the notables at the National capital:

There is but little gossip about this week, but I am able to say authoritatively that Thaddeus Stevens expects to die in harness, also that Judge Underwood is a radical. Roscoe Conkling is the best dressed man in Congress. Reverdy Johnson has more dignity in his make-up than any other member of the Senate. Thad Stevens looks like a Methodist preacher. Impeacher Ashley has had his hyacinth looks combed. Judge Wilson of Iowa, has grown gray in two years, and dresses more like a Christian now than a plough-boy, as he used to. Bill Williams, of Indiana, has got a new pair of eye-glasses which he hasn't worn long enough to get accustomed to, and, consequently, looks through them very awkwardly, although he wears them all the time. Illinois Washburne lost much of his obesity during his recent European trip, but as usual swings his hands and arms when he talks, very much like the fans of a wind-mill. General Logan has had his hair cut, and looks very much like Zeb. Vance, late rebel Governor of North Carolina. Speaker Colfax's tongue is set on a pivot in the middle of his mouth, so that he can talk faster than Barnum's lightning calculator can cypher. Jack Rogers is, next to Speaker Colfax, the fastest talker in the world, and next to Cicero, whose mantle fell on his shoulders and slid off on the ground, (nobody has ever picked up since,) is the longest sentenced man that ever lived. General Grant got through public intervening at Appomattox Congress House, and hasn't had one with anybody since. People won't believe me when I say that Ross, of Illinois, is a joker, but say he tries to be one. Eldridge, of Wisconsin, never made a speech of more than ten minutes duration in his life, and is one of the ablest Democrats in Congress. Marshall, of Illinois, is improving in health. Hooper, of Massachusetts, shows in his face, as well as in the rotundity of his person, that he is the best liver in the House, looks like the ghost of a starved cork-screw. He is so thin that he has to stand up twice to make a shadow, and yet he is a first-rate liver. Gen. Garfield has got the strongest voice of any man in Congress; Gen. Logan has the loudest; Colfax the deepest; Thad Stevens the weakest, and Kelly, of Pennsylvania, and Gen. Banks will have to flip pennies to find which has the most stentorian. Kelly, however, talks through his nose too much, and imitates Forrest in his style of declamation. He would make a first-class Jack Cade. Leonard Meyers and Charles O'Neil, of Philadelphia, are as close in their intimacy with each other as the Siamese twins. Gen. Schenck and General Butler talk by jerks—a phrase or a sentence at each jerk—as if they really believed what they said, and expected everybody to be convinced of the correctness of their views the moment the words left their mouths. Butler wears a very wide brimmed hat, tilted on one side of head with a rakish air, while his make-up otherwise resembles a well-fed alderman. Philadelph Van Trump, of Ohio, looks, acts, and talks like a stuffed turkey. More anon.

A delicate little girl stole noiselessly to her mother's side. She watched the needle flashing out and in through the cambric for a minute, and then said, in a low, tremulous voice:

"Dear mother, I have broken your China vase."

"You have? You are a vexatious, wicked thing!"

The mother spoke harshly, and her eyes flashed angrily. "Go to bed immediately. You shall have no supper."

With a disheartened, disappointed look, the little girl glided out of the room. She crept up the dark stairs and sobbed herself to sleep, with her face buried in her pillow. Was that the proper way in which to answer that trembling culprit? Had she not struggled against the temptation to tell a falsehood, and came out conqueror? It does not take much to crush the "sweet flower of truth" in the hearts of some children.

A BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.—The velvet moss grows on the sterile rock; the mistletoe flourishes on the naked branches; the ivy clings to the mouldering ruin; the pine and cedar remain fresh and fadeless amid the desolation of the preceding year, and—Heaven be praised—some thing green and beautiful to see and grateful to the soul will, in the darkest hour of fate, still twine its tendrils around the crumbling altars and broken arches of the desolate temple of the heart.
