Nothing daunted, Mr. Martin proposed to walk up the street. In passing along Second street they took a carriage and drove out to St. Mary's on Poplar street as the most convenient place for the ceremony. The rector Geo H. Harris was not in, and the trio still on matrimony bent, despite the cruel fate which seemed opposed, started back down town. When near Fourth street Mr. M. spied Mr. Harris on the street and accosted him, asking his services. With a profound bow the rector expressed himself willing and ready, and the quartet, taking a street car, again proceeded to St. Mary's, being joined on the route by two young ladies, friends of all parties, who happened along at the time. Arriving at the church it being dark by this time, the lights were turned on, and the rather strange looking bridal party—Mr. Martin being in his everyday working clothes—proceeded at once to the chancel, where in his clerical robes, awaited the reverend gentleman who was soon to across the street and get married!"

The rector was promptly accepted in the same spirit, and in high glee the two crossed the street and entered the church, in which services were being held at the time. Not seeing any manifestation of faltering on the lady's part, Mr. Stone said:

"Miss Sallie, I dare you to go across the street and get married!"

Tiring of that, the two walked up second street, until opposite the Calvary Church, when the conversation changing to be on matrimony, Mr. Stone in a tone of raillery, said:

"I give up; you have beaten me; let us go," and the two retraced their steps to Court square, where the two met the couple above referred to. They had a package of candy, and Mr. Stone asked for some, which they jokingly refused.

"Very well, Miss Sallie, we will go and buy a package for ourselves."

They accordingly went to Madison street and bought the confections. Coming out they saw a milk wagon standing in the alley alongside the store.

"Is not that Mr. Martin's wagon?" asked Miss Martin.

"Yes, I believe it is," responded Mr. Stone.

"I would like to see him," said Miss Sallie, "for I thought him such a nice gentleman the other night at a party, and would like to see him again."

Retracing their steps they went into the store and inquired after Mr. Martin.

A Romantic Marriage.

From a correspondence to the Cincinnati Commercial of March 7th the following bit of romance is taken:

MARRIED.—Martin—Martin—At St. Mary's Church in this city, on Monday, March 2, 1874, by the Rev. Geo. C. Harris, Mr. G. Fred Martin, of this city, to Miss S. B. Martin, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Very plain, very proper, and very fortunate, was what all who saw the notice, and were acquainted with the parties, thought of the affair. Among the more intimate friends of the happy couple considerable surprise was manifested, as it was well known that the two had never met but a few times, save in the street.

Last Monday afternoon, Mr. Jo-stone a well known young man, met Miss Sallie Bell Martin, and a lady friend on Main street, proposed to take a walk on the bluffs, from which point a fine view can be had of the mighty river which leaves their base, and the Arkansas shore already putting on the beautiful, fresh garb of spring. It was a lovely afternoon, and the trio spent a half hour on the bluffs watching the hundreds of steam-boat laborers at their feet, all busily loading and unloading the floating palace, and commenting on the varied scenes in the panorama before them. Turning back and coming down Madison street, a gentleman acquaintance was met who, who after a few minutes chat walked away with the lady friend referred to, leaving Mr. Stone and our heroine together. Walking down Main street, Mr. Stone purchased a pocketfull of nuts, with which he and Miss Martin, going into Court square, gave the frolicsome squirrels.

A YOUNG LADY OF NERVE.

Tiring of that, the two walked up second street, until opposite the Calvary Church, when the conversation changing to be on matrimony, Mr. Stone in a tone of ra-
illery, said:

"Miss Sallie, I dare you to go across the street and get married!"

cepted in the same spirit, and in high glee the two crossed the street and entered the church, in which services were being held at the time. Not seeing any mani-

Retracing their steps they went into the store and inquired after Mr. Martin.

Being told that he was somewhere near, they again went into the street, and met the gentleman sought on the sidewalk. He is our hero. A few minutes of social conversation ensued when Mr. Stone said:

A PLUCKY YOUNG MAN.

"Fred, Miss Sallie here has just beckoned me out on a proposition to get married."

"Well," replied Mr. Martin, turning to the lady, "you can't back me out!"

"Yes, I can," laughingly responded Miss Martin; and then for two or three minutes the parties indulged in laughter and repartee, finally closing with the proposition that Mr. Stone go off and get a license.

This was agreed to by all parties, and the trio set off for the office of the County Clerk, where the coveted document was to be had.

Arriving there, they fortunately met Mr. John Overton, Jr., who acquiesced to go on the marriage boud, and in ten minutes the license was signed, sealed and delivered by the smiling clerk, J. Reilly.

Coming out the question was put by Mr. Martin:

"Where will we go to get married?"

In that obliging manner which renders him such a favorite, Mr. Stone proposed the nearest Squire (Hill). The office was not in.

Nothing daunted, Mr. Martin proposed to walk up the street. In passing along Second street they took a carriage and drove out to St. Mary's on Poplar street as the most convenient place for the ceremony.
