A compilation of the reports received from over 10,000 sawmills in the United States upon their operations in 1905 gives the accompanying table, in which are shown the proportion of lumber kiln-dried and the proportion surfaced, the amount of slab wood sold, and the proportion of logs cut on lands belonging to the sawmill operators. The States in which the largest proportion of lumber is kiln-dried by manufacturers are South Carolina, with 51.3 per cent; North Carolina, with 36.5 per cent; Florida, with 35.9 per cent; Alabama, with 34.8 per cent; and Georgia, with 30.6 per cent. In other States the amount is less than 20 per cent. Altogether, 1,542 mills reported the use of dry kilns.
