"Astonished the Natives."

This is an old saying, the origin of which is probably unknown, and it is doubtful if anybody particularly wants to claim credit for it. In this case it is so absolutely true nothing else will so adequately describe the situation. The "natives" were the only ones who were astonished, and many were heard to remark, "You don't mean to tell me that fruit was raised around here?" When told that it was, and given the name of the grower, he went to hunt him up to verify the statement. The newcomer that is if he has been here long enough to look around, does nothing but admire and declare it beats anything he has ever seen, no matter what part of the wide world he came from.

A short time ago Attorney Snover delivered an address before a large crowd at the Marshfield Chamber of Commerce on the wonderful advantages of raising the Gravenstein apple, giving logical reasons why it was the best kind for this section, setting forth the fact that on account of its ripening early enough to get into the Alaska market; also that it was the most prolific and that no section of the country could beat Coos county in flavor, size and beauty.

That started an argument, and one that has not been stopped as yet—to be truthful about it, no one is trying to stop it. Those who favored the Baldwin commenced hunting for the finest to be had. The Northern Spy champion got busy—in fact, every variety of fruit grown in this county began to pile up in the Chamber of Commerce rooms. If they didn't have big apples they brought in huge potatoes, monster cabbage and cauliflower; one man brought a fine tobacco stock, and the ladies, not to be outdone, brought in beautiful flowers, till the hall is a veritable bower. Were the natives astonished? Yes, they were dumfounded, squelched—all broken up.

When one of them saw peaches raised within three miles of Marshfield that measured 11 inches in circumference he came near having a stroke of apoplexy. A. W. Myers of Lee, Coos county, has exhibited some red Beltingheimers (some call them the Gloria Monday) that weigh two pounds each.

To show the utter carelessness of some of the people here (and you might say criminal neglect), it will be well to illustrate: When the first box of apples came in one old resident, who had not probably seen his ranch in a year, says: "Why, I can beat those easy." Out he goes and gets a launch, examines his compass and takes a man along with him to find his orchard. With his compass he finally locates his ranch about six miles up Coos river and one mile back. The place where the orchard should be was found and the owner began reaching up in the brush and picking off apples. His companion called out: "Hold on, those are not apple trees; they are alder." The fact is, that the alders had grown to more than twice the size of the apple trees, and so thick it was next to impossible to find the apples. The fruit was there in plenty and large and luscious and without a blemish. He said he would go back the next day and shake the apples all off on the ground to keep the bears from climbing the trees and breaking them down. Think of it! And those same apples would bring him $1 per box in Marshfield. Is it any wonder (that is, till of late), and that she has no railroad? But watch us from now on! This fruit contest has demonstrated that the bench and upland, which can be had from $5 to $10 per acre, is the best for fruit. A worm in a Coos county apple is an oddity.

Prizes for Fruit.

The prizes for this fruit exhibit will be given on September 16. Dr. Withycombe and Professors Kerr and Lewis of the Agricultural college of Corvallis will be the judges.

The C. A. Smith mill, with a capacity of 250,000 feet per day, is now under roof and rapidly nearing completion.

The Courtney Lumber company's mill, with a capacity of 75,000 feet per day, will also soon be in operation.

Within one year the daily output of lumber will be 600,000 feet. Add to this the proper adjuncts that will be added to the new mills in the way of planing mills, shingle mills, door and sash factories, etc., and it will be easy to imagine a very busy place.

Four large concrete, cut stone and brick buildings are now under construction, all to be completed within the year, to say nothing of the hundreds of private residences going up all over the bay, together with the hundreds contemplated, easily verifies the first line of this article, "Something doing every minute."

Every boat and every stage coming in is loaded to the guards, and about the only time you hear anything about a railroad is when some visitor complains about how long it took him to get here. Everybody else is busy with his business and gives it no thought, confident in his own mind that the railroad will come, and in the meantime he is anchoring himself to the ground floor, happy and contented and too busy to grumble.
