WHEN WE LEARN DEAR OLD OREGON.

It is a temporary misfortune for them and the state that Oregonians do not better understand Oregon. We are today enormously short of our possibilities in wealth-making. Until we shall grasp an adequate conception of these possibilities we cannot come into our own in production and prosperity. We are, in short, far behind our true position through ignorance of the number and true value of our assets. Here for illustration, is the country and the world calling for our dairy products. Our farms and our factories are not producing 20 per cent of the volume of these products for which there is persistent and exacting demand. It is a means by which to bring into Oregon a steady stream of gold as yellow as the golden butter and cheese that would create it. The world's markets actually stand waiting, gold in hand, and beckoning to Oregon farmers, creameries and cheese factories, to send on their products. It is a condition almost unheard of and as remarkable as it is true. Here are the condensed milk factories in Washington county which have shipped 1000 carloads during the year and are still 40 to 50 per cent behind on orders. The product goes past the doors of Eastern factories of the same character and outsets the latter in the markets $1,000,000 worth selling in a single season in a large city. The Oregon climate and soil produce superior milk, superior butter a superior product, and the consumer demands it. This discovery has worked a revolution in the husbandry of Washington county. A dozen years ago there was not a bank in the county, now there is half a dozen and almost every dairy farmer is rich. The land then was worth from $30 to $40 an acre, and now it yields from $150 to $200 an acre.

Tillamook cheese was quoted recently in London, England, at 1 cent to 1 1/2 cents above the market for the best European product.

Twenty years ago New York and New England were selling $25,000,000 worth of cheese per year in England. They inferiorized the product by making and selling filled cheese, and now sells but $3,000,000 worth. Here is unparalleled opportunity for Tillamook; she can supply 5 per cent of the demand. Half a dozen years ago Tillamook cheese brought 9 cents a pound in the California markets. This year California and other buyers went to Tillamook and bought the cheese product as fast as it could be made at 15 1/2 cents.

These are samples of what the world offers Oregonians, if Oregonians will realize and utilize the resources with which nature has endowed them prodigiously. Expert testimony is overwhelmingly and unanimously to the effect that the conditions in Washington county are duplicable all over western Oregon. We shall have a superb commonwealth, and the problem of life will be easy when we realize what we have—Oregon.—Pendleton Tribune.

Does your present occupation demand the best that is in you—or are you frittering away" some of your talents?

A SUBSCRIBER LOST.

Troy Toples has lost a subscriber, as witness the letter received some days ago.

Enter, Nov. 11, 1907.

Troy Laundry Machinery Co., Ltd.

Good-morn: Kindly do not send your back, Troy Toples, as I am not running a laundry any more. As I am now farming and do not need Toples any longer, and those running the laundry here are Chinese, so I guess your magazine would be too white to do them any good.

Anything you could do in the shape of a help on a farm would be all right. Respectfully yours,

Don't let this happen in Marshfield.

There is yet a white laundry in the city, Phone 571, and our wagon will call.

WITH THE TOAST AND TEA

Many men in obscure spheres fill them with noble and godly content, with a sense of vocation, which lasts till the final summons. Others are restless, soured, embittered; they try this expedient and that to make themselves known, and if they cannot have the real gold of fame they will have at any cost the German silver of notoriety. —ROBERT NICHOLL.

THE MORNING AFTER.

Last night I ate a sandwich And had a bottle cold 'Twas in the new club that we sat, And merry stories told, And, oh, when I had gone to sleep A man came to my bed, And with a cleaver bright and sharp Reached out to get my head.

Then I turned over on my side But not to sleep, alas; Another demon sought to kill By giving laughing gas, And still another brute appeared, To strangle me he came; He wore a coat of mail, and from His eyes shot tongues of flame.

And all night long it seemed I fought With demons bad to see; With ugly brutes that thought it sport To try to murder me. The very hissing of their breath Methought I plainly heard; And when I tried to scream for help I couldn't say a word.

This morning, oh! My aching head is throbbing and I seem To feel as though I had undergone What really was a dream. I used to love a sandwich Before I came to know, That such a dainty little thing Could treat a fellow so." GEO. GOODRUM.

They were seated in those dreamland cushions at the Millcoma club—Dave Stafford insists that it is the cushions that are dreamland and not the wall paper—"Jack" Flanagan said that instead of playing "Solo" or billiards that club life should be made intellectual as well as entertaining. He suggested that each of those present try their wits at a little of poetry.

"Easy, easy," remarked Dr. Straw. "Poetry is my long suit. I would rather write poetry than prescriptions. Just to prove it what do you think of this—

"The time is here I wish to state When you must write it Nineteen-eight."

"That isn't poetry," said P. A. Devans, "that is punk. Now poetry must possess something more than rhythm. It must contain a thought—something like this which I have just dashed off—

"About this Season is just The time 'tis vain to regret; 'Tis awful hard to raise the dust The weather is too wet."

By this time they were busy with their pencils. A little later when they adjourned to the Goldie room for some clam juice a number of scraps of paper were found on the floor. Some of those that could be deciphered and identified were as follows:

Adam never hit his thumb

While driving a carpet tack;

And furthermore, Eve never wore

A waist that buttoned down her back. —E. K. JONES.

"Stay, jaffer, stay and hear my woe!"

The babe looked up and smiled,

"Two souls with but a single thought."

"Oh, fireman save my child."

—IVY CONDRON.

The boy stood on the Breakwater deck

Where oft he had stood before

And listened to the mate recite

"The Face Upon the Floor." C. F. McCOLLUM.

Maud Muller on a summer's day,

Pulled out a plum and said

"No! Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight,

Because Old Grimes is Dead." —WILL LAWLOR.

"Take back your gold," she softly said,

"On the Wabash" all was still,

When someone yelled "Oh, cut it out!"

With "The Sword of Bunker Hill,"

—J. S. COKE.

"Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight,"

"The Village Blacksmith" cried,

For "The Old Bellringer" has gone away,

Out on "The Flowing Tide." —FRANK PARSONS.
