CALIFORNIA CITY OF A MILLION HENS.

Some Interesting Figures Concerning the Poultry Industry in Petaluma.

Coos county poultry raisers can find much interest in studying the figures that prove the profit that there is in the poultry business when properly conducted on a large scale. Some 50 miles north of San Francisco the town of Petaluma lies on a moor between low mountains. It is largely built up on the poultry industry. In the portion of Sonoma County tributary to the town, over 120,000,000 eggs were produced in 1907, more than 10,000,000 dozen.

At least 75 per cent of the people of the country raise poultry. It is not an occupation relegated to the grandmothers. It is a man's occupation. In Petaluma men are chicken-raisers as they are elsewhere bankers, merchants or lawyers. One of the hatching plants has a capacity of 100,000. That is to say, it can, and does, when the season's demands are heavy, turn out 100,000 young chickens every three weeks. They go east to Kansas City, south into Old Mexico, north into British Columbia.

Duck's eggs are also hatched out in wholesale lots in incubation in this region. The Chinese are particularly fond of ducks when they have reached just a certain age, I think it is usually about nine weeks. Then the blood which was in the quills has reached the body and they can be plucked without bleeding. One raiser of ducks in the Petaluma region sold last year 60,000 ducks, averaging more than $1 each. He sold 16,000 ducks at the nine weeks' period for $16,000 to Chinamen alone, who came to his depot in San Francisco with their dollars and their huge, swaying shoulder-baskets and took the ducks away without waiting for delivery.
