VENEZUELA'S CASE.

Whatever course congress pursues in the matter of Venezuela at this time will be undertaken with full information and likewise with ample justification. Voluminous correspondence and reports have been before the state department, the executive and the congressional committees. The facts to which they relate have been made public from time to time during the past five years. It is plain that our government has shown forbearance and acted throughout in a spirit of dignified patience, coupled with a fine measure of equity. At the same time the conduct of Venezuela appears to have been whimsical, oppressive and unjust.

Venezuela's contentions are three in number, Castro's government claiming that some of the matters now in dispute have once been arbitrated and therefore disposed of finally; that other matters have been adjudicated by regularly constituted courts of Venezuela, to which American residents in that country are bound to submit their causes, and that one of the parties to the American claims is not now and never has been a citizen of the United States. On their face these contentions seem to be reasonable, but there is also reason in the answer of the United States.

Venezuela has already once asked the United States to set aside an award made by a board of arbitration, and the request was granted. In 1895 the United States consented to reopen a case of this kind dating back to 1895, and Venezuela had the benefit of this extraordinary departure from a recognized principle of international law. It is also an unusual thing for one country to impeach the highest court of another country, the position we take in disputing the adjudication of the supreme court of Venezuela. But it is assumed in Washington that in the disputed action of the Venezuelan court there was undue discrimination against a citizen of the United States, and perhaps also a violation of the rules for the maintenance of justice which are sanctioned by international law. At least the records in this case clearly warrant the demands made by our government.

The third point, that one of the claimants in the disputes with Venezuela is not a citizen of the United States, is a knotty one, but yet the rulings of international courts seem to be reasonable and founded in justice. Each country decides for itself what constitutes a valid title to its citizenship, and the validity of that title can be challenged only by the country of which the man was formerly a citizen. Challenges of this kind are not uncommon, but a third state cannot be a party to such dispute. Although Venezuela, through her erratic and misguided ruler, has forfeited in a measure the respect of other nations, nevertheless her rights under treaty stipulations and the principles of international justice will be given due regard while this country insists upon an equal regard for its own honor and dignity, its treaty rights and its privileges under the law of nations.

After having been locked up in arctic ice for more than sixty years Sir Robert McClure's famous exploring ship, the Investigator, is reported once more afloat. The vessel was abandoned in 1854 on the northern shore of Banks Land. She is reported in good condition, even her supplies and instruments having suffered no great deterioration, and it is expected that she can be towed to Alaska and eventually returned home.

The foreign demand for American heliesses is so strong now and the supply so limited that it takes a royal duke to get a hearing where any sort of countlet used to do.

The most enthusiastic supporter of the Monroe doctrine will hardly deny that a little coercing may be a good thing for Haiti and for everybody concerned.

WITH THE TOAST AND TEA

GOOD EVENING.

IN THE ROUGH. WITHIN the oyster's shell uncouth the purest pearl may hide. Trust me, you'll find a heart of truth Within the rough outside. -Mrs. Osgood.

DAYS THAT ARE NO MORE. TEARS, idle tears, I know not what they mean, Tears from the depth of some divine despair Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes. In looking on the happy autumn fields, And thinking of the days that are no more.

Fresh as the first beam glittering on a sail That brings our friends up from the underworld. Sad as the last which reddens over one That sinks with all we love below the verge. So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more.

Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer dawns The earliest pipe of half-awaken'd birds To dying ears, when unto dying eyes The casement slowly grows a glimmering square. So sad, so strange, the days that are no more.

Dear as remember'd kisses after death, And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feign'd On lips that are for others; deep as love, Deep as first love, and wild with all regret. Oh, death in life, the days that are no more. -Tennyson.

When we do the best we can we think the world ought to sit around and applaud and be thankful that it escaped our worst.

Many a hard path could be made easier by the use of a little common sense.

It is a fine thing that the good time is always coming, for if it were past we would have a dismal time of it indeed.

The trouble with most of us is that we can't see why people can't see our tallow candle as far as they can see our neighbor's electroler.

A hard day's work with nothing to eat at the end of it is recommended as an excellent remedy for both dyspepsia and egotism.

The less time a man has to talk about being useful the more he is apt to be making good.

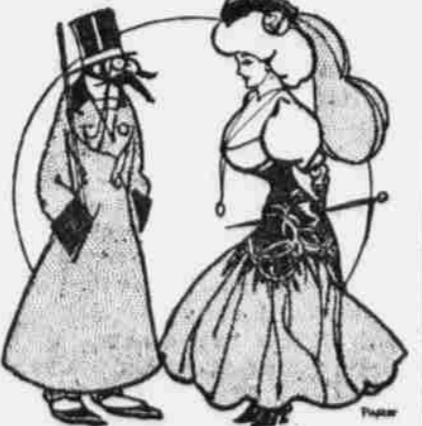

There are always plenty of people who are praying you to be strong in order that they may more safely indulge their weaknesses.

It pays to be pleasant; but, then, anything is pleasant that pays.

One reason why self conceit cannot recognize anybody else is because it feels that it has more than it can do in taking care of its own personality.

To all intents and purposes a man that's married is a man that's harried.

Something Like It.

"What does he know about bravery? He never led a forlorn hope." "He didn't, eh? Have you ever seen the lady he led to the marriage altar?"

Maybe. When gray old March Takes up his grip And through the arch-Way makes his trip Glad April's smiles We hail with glee, For she beguiles With melody.

Red robin then Will common be. Likewise the wren Will haunt the tree Too cool for ice, Too warm for coal, We'll save a slice From our old roll.

Clever Man. "His property is all in his wife's name." "Well, if that were only all." "What do you mean?" "I have heard that a lot of other people's property is in his wife's name too."

Different in One Way. "Bythe thinks he has written a great story." "Yes, he has had me looking it over." "Find anything original in it?" "Well, the spelling."

ALLIANCE IN FROM NORTH

Dense Fog Off Coast Sunday Evening and Night Delays Steamship Slightly.

The Alliance reached Coos Bay this morning from Portland after a fair voyage. Her speed down was impeded last evening and during the night by a dense fog off the coast. Owing to the tide, she will sail at 8 o'clock Tuesday morning from Coos Bay for Portland.

Captain Olson says that Portland has been crowded the past week with thousands in attendance at the Rose Festival. He says that the water parade passed the Alliance which was lying at her dock but Captain Olson had her brilliantly lighted for the occasion.
