GIRLS CAN WIN HUSBANDS BY PERSONAL MAGNETISM

Judge Light Urges School Teachers to Study the Art and Select Affinities.

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., June 20.—Judge John H. Light, member of the Board of School Visitors, in an address before the Norwalk Town Teachers' Association on "The Psychology of Teachers," urged the young women to spend an hour of study each day in the development of personal magnetism, the same as they would the study of any art.

Primarily this was for the purpose of gaining the interest and the attention and the love of their pupils, he said; secondly, it was not only to obtain a husband, but that the discipline might win a large number of suitors from whom a girl might select an affinity. Many girls had but one chance, he said, and accepting the one they soon found they made a mistake.

Judge Light said only one-fourth of the teachers married. If they had spent as much time in cultivating personal magnetism as they did in dressing their hair, he declared, three-fourths of them would be married.

BIDDER LOSES A HUSBAND.

Offered $350, But Had Only $157 In Cash to Pay Rival.

NEW YORK, June 20.—Because Many Barna did not have enough money to buy Steve Gurick, he is now the husband of another woman. He was married to Annie Markowitz by Judge Owen Mahon. Steve himself had little to do with it, except in the beginning. Steve had engaged himself to both, but Annie had first claim. Mary offered her $157, all she had saved, but Annie said he was worth $350, and she would not sell him for a cent less. Then Mary said she would pay the $157 down to bind the bargain, and $3 a week until Steve was fully paid for, but again Annie refused. Mary took the matter into court on a charge of breach of promise, but the judge denied that Steve belonged to Annie, and that Mary had recognized the fact by trying to buy him from her. So Steve and Annie were married, while Mary looked on but said nothing.

TRIALS AND TRIBULATIONS OF AN OREGON POLITICAL CANDIDATE

R. D. HUME OF WEDDERBURN, CONTRIBUTES AN INTERESTING ARTICLE ON THE RECENT CAMPAIGN AND TELLS WHY HE WAS DEFEATED FOR STATE SENATOR FROM COOS AND

R. D. Hume, the Rogue River salmon king, is inclined to believe that Oregon is not yet ripe for clean politics. This conclusion was probably drawn from the result of the recent election in which he was defeated for state senator from Coos and Curry counties. He made a clean campaign, merely letting everyone know that he was a candidate and what his platform was. He did not make any particular campaign.

Concerning his defeat and his views of Oregon politics, he has written rather lengthily as follows:

"I wish to thank the few who supported me at the late election, that may have been laboring with the mistaken idea that the people of Coos and Curry considered matters concerning legislation anything more than a joke, and desire to enlighten such of my friends who have not discovered the fact, if any there be, as to the causes which make such a state of public opinion possible.

"As for myself, I had little confidence in any successful result being obtained so far as my chances of election went, but being the last time that I could try the experiment I was curious to know what the result of a campaign made without personal effort or the ordinary free adjuncts heretofore fashionable might be. The result shows that habits which have been of long standing become second nature and though the community may be strongly dry, the habit of being wet around election times is so ingrained in the average voter that he cannot realize merit in anything else.

"The majority of ancient Oregonians were always wanting to get something for nothing, free feeds, free drinks, free smokes, free rides, etc., and there are some still remaining among us, while their descendants are imbued with the same spirit. Bourne, our highly respected senator to congress, understood this peculiarity of Oregonians to a nicety, but since moving to Washington has probably found a different sort of society and may be somewhat unoccupied until our George arrives, when something will be doing in the catering line. Oregonians are a peculiar people. While they are striving to keep the main body dry they seem delighted to have a wet head.

"Preachers, printers and poets have shouted for a wet head, although some of the same are suffering from a dry throat. (Note the vote for U. S. senator.) While the radical of the lot are ready to take theirs by immersion, between these last and our George there is a bond of sympathy that nothing but a Sahara drought could dry up, and these form the majority in Oregon even if a portion of them do belong to the church and keep the jug behind the door. A jug behind the door is a great comfort to the old soak who voted dry, as he finds he can get bigger drinks for less money than from the saloon, and can pose before the community as an eminently temperate man and worthy citizen, while can go to bed drunk every night.

"So much for the lack of 'setting them up.' Now we will consider the other forces which militated against me at the late election.

"The result has proven that the people of this district have no use for those who have made the development of the country in which they live possible, and that are content to be led by the boosters and knockers who, like weaving spiders, sit in the middle of the web to haul into their net the unwary who come within reach. These 'toil not, neither do they spin' anything but yarns to deceive the foolish or to destroy the good name of those who are active in the creation of industries which furnish employment to those by whom they are surrounded. Such parasites add nothing to the wealth of the world and furnish nothing for its betterment. They give employment to none, but playing up on the jealous tendencies of the human mind, draw to themselves the support of those who have forgotten the scriptural injunction, 'By their fruits ye shall know them,' and use such foolish ones to help themselves to such good things as their capacity will enable them to grasp.

"The tolling masses are kept at a fever heat by these do nothing agitators whose numbers are great and who, by magnified stories of the wealth of a few individuals, lead the people to believe that the money of the country is in the hands of the few who consequently are a menace to the prosperity of the nation, therefore any man who is doing things to develop the section in which he lives, who pays his debts, is also an enemy of those whom he employs. The idea being instilled in their minds that no man is honest that has made a success of life, they cannot understand how one could desire to represent them unless he some scheme to urge for his personal benefit. Therefore they expect to discount the graft by making such aspirant ante to every little grafter along the route. This diseased condition of the public mind, the germs of which have been handed down from the misty days of Oregon's past, has been inoculated by the microbes that have generated in other portions of the Union, and the public have become so fertilized that an epidemic has resulted. When, however, its course has been run the laboring people will discover that it is work, not wind pudding, that is most necessary for their comfort and happiness, and that one man of genius who is able to conceive and carry out developments that add to the wealth of the world for their benefit, is of more worth to them though he may swing millions than though the same millions were divided among a lot of misers who have no capacity beyond lending money at usurious rates, or a lot of boosters who are trying to get something for nothing. The effort of these agitators tends to discourage every man who has ambition and capacity to lead in the development of the natural wealth of the country and when ambition is killed, mankind will degenerate to the condition of savages. Money is the most minute portion of the wealth of the world, and were the idea which idiotic writers are seeking to convey to the public mind correct, viz: The wealth of large operators represented by money alone, were the men of whom its possession is credited, to cease expending the same there would not be a dollar in circulation in the United States. The fact is the wealth of the greatest capitalists finds investments in industries and developments which keep labor in motion to add still more profusely to the created wealth of our country. The man is nothing, the energies he represents is everything, and one of administrative genius is worth more to the laboring classes than millions of the hot air digesters who draw conclusions from false principles. 'You may fool all the people some of the time and some of the people all of the time, but you cannot fool all the people all of the time.' And there is bound to come an awakening, but perhaps not until poverty shall have brought many to where their eyes will be opened that they may see clearly. In conclusion I will say to my friends that as Geo. E. Chamberlain has received the majority votes of the people of Oregon I believe it is the proper thing to send him to Washington as senator, and my reasons for the belief are first, the state will be rid of him for a portion of his term as governor, during which incumbency he has damaged the resources of the state more than all his predecessors put together, and secondly that the hypnotic spell which he has put upon a majority of Oregonians may be broken by the opportunity offered of measuring him when placed among the representative men of the nation. The field will be large and he won't be able to claim everything in sight and will have to make good."

ON NOVEL WEDDING TOURS.

To Ride to Conventions on Elephants and Mules.

MAMMOTH SPRINGS, Ark., June 20.—W. H. Alexander, a democratic politician, living near here, and Harry Palmer, a Missouri republican, have agreed on a joint wedding ceremony, to be followed by a honeymoon trip with the brides on the backs of mules and an elephant.

Palmer intends to go through to Chicago via St. Louis on the elephant, accompanied by his bride. He hopes to arrive in time to attend the Republican Convention. Alexander and his wife will ride mules all the way to Denver.

The novel plan was discussed in the presence of their respective fiancées, both of whom readily agreed to the trip as outlined. No wager has been made, and the best of feeling exists between the politicians, it is explained.
