HOW ABOUT THIS FOR SCHOOL ECONOMY?

Citizen Says School Board Did Not Use Precise Judgment In Awarding Bids.

Editor Times:

Behind the decision of the school board on the brand of cement to be used on the new school building, there seems to be an impression extant that that august body did not use precise judgment when they decided to use Golden Gate Cement. It now transpires that Messrs. Masters & McLain had given them a price on Foreign Cement below that of any other bidder on the imported article, but, when it was learned that a considerable saving could be effected if a California product were used, the school board called for prices on a cement made on the Pacific coast.

Masters & McLain then quoted a price on Standard Portland Cement which was much below that quoted on Golden Gate, but, through some process of reckoning the higher price cement was ordered. Masters & McLain feel that they have been slighted in the matter to an extent too great to be passed over lightly.

They point to the fact that they were the lowest bidders on Foreign Cement, which was to be used at first, and also the lowest bidder on the Pacific coast product which was subsequently decided upon; yet, they did not get the order, which they claim, under competitive bidding, they were clearly entitled to.

When it comes to a question of merit the Standard Portland Cement people point to the fact that their cement is guaranteed to pass the specification of the American Society of Civil Engineers; that it is being used by the United States government (one of the most careful purchasers), in the Dry Dock Construction Work at Mare Island Navy Yard. In the work covering the fortifications of the Bay of San Francisco, in the government construction now going on in the Hawaii Islands, and in this latter place it is said that if a cement will stand up there it will stand up in any climate in the world.

Standard Portland Cement was used in the concrete work in the O'Connell building, in the Coos building and many other places right here in Marshfield and has certainly proved its merit in these jobs.

In view of all these facts, Masters & McLain feel aggrieved and slighted.

They gave the school board the lowest price on Foreign Cement, they did not use it!

They gave the school board the lowest price on a California cement (Standard Portland); they did not get the order!

It would appear that it is now up to the majority of the school board to explain to the citizens and taxpayers of Marshfield why they selected a cement, no better in efficiency, perhaps not as high, at a price higher than Standard Portland.
