GOOD EVENING.

Consider what you have in the smallest chosen library. A company of the wisest and wittiest men that could be picked out of all civil countries in a thousand years have set in best order the results of their learning and wisdom. The men themselves were hid and inaccessible, solitary, impatient of interruption, fenced by etiquette; but the thought which they did not uncover to their bosom friends is here written out in transparent words to us, strangers of another age.

EMERSON.

How to Make It Easy.

If you wake up feeling bad, Scold your wife; If the weather makes you sad, Scold your wife; If your collar button slides into some dark nook and hides, As you move with angry strides, Scold your wife.

If the coffee's cold or flat, Scold your wife; If your chop has too much fat, Scold your wife; In the butter, do not leave Soft sighs or in silence grieve— Scold your wife.

If your hat has gone astray, Scold your wife; If you're late upon the way, Scold your wife; If the day brings any loss, If you fail to please the boss, Journey homeward feeling cross— Scold your wife.

Never mind what ills she bears— Scold your wife; Add your own to all her cares— Scold your wife; That's the way to get along; She is weak and you are strong; Every time a thing goes wrong, Scold your wife.

—Chicago Record-Herald.

"If one is right at the center, he is likely to get right at the circumference."

Learning Meekness. "Why didn't you slug the man who insulted you?" "I am in training for a baseball umpire."

Saved by Their Size.

A vice president and a couple of lieutenant governors were sailing the seas in search of health and pleasure when a violent storm came up, wrecking their bark and casting them adrift on a cannibal island.

The natives hurried to the shore to give them a hearty greeting, for they were tired of the breakfast foods and dried berries on which they had been subsisting for some time.

"What is your business, trade or calling?" asked the chief pleasantly before dispatching them preparatory to dressing them for the soup kettle.

Tremblingly the men confessed their humble stations in life. The chief looked them over and turned away, with a grunt. "We are not so hard up, my fellow cannibals," he said, "that we are reduced to eating such small potatoes as that."

"A pot or a man that boils over always causes trouble."

"Let your thoughts be as clean as dew."

"The bridal path may be a dangerous road."

"Some men's idea of a good story is one that is told in whispers."

"After you get through confessing your own sins will be time enough to reveal the faults of your neighbors."

"The world is usually willing to step aside for the man who knows where he is going."

"Great results that spring from trifles to eternity extend."

"A morning dip is better than a morning 'nip.'"

PETTY BRIBERY.

The man who hands you a cigar Has something up his sleeve. He'll ask a favor, you may bet, Before he takes his leave. Or if he doesn't spring it then A day or two will see The inner workings of his scheme. Just take the tip from me.

He isn't passing them around, No odds how small the price, Unless he banks on something more Substantial than advice; Unless he figures on returns To more than simply pay For every cigar or cord of wood He stops to give away.

He wants to use your buggy horse Or court your sister Jane; He wants to touch you for a loan Or sell you mules in Spain; He wants to have you on a bond Or sign with him a note, And in nine cases out of ten He also wants your vote.

Cigars cost money more or less, And he who hands them round Don't do it solely for his health. This is a truth profound. He scatters them liberally Like bread upon the tide, Expecting they will wonder back Each ten times multiplied.

Educated Food.

"How do you like the new cook?" "Great. Her biscuits are a poem." "She must be a graduate of a cooking school."

Help! Help!

"He threw me off the track." "Did it come to your aid?" "What?" "The wrecking train."

Not So Heavy Either.

"How do they pay for poetry, by measure or by weight?" "Most of them pay me by wait, if at all."
