THE PLAIN DUTY OF CLEVELAND DEMOCRATS

Mr. Cleveland has so clearly pointed out to those who believed in the principles for which he contended in life their proper course in the coming election that it would seem that they needed no further suggestion. That Judge Parker, late Democratic candidate for president, should be trailing in the Bryan camp is in accord with his record of loyalty to Bryan in 1896 and 1900. Judge Parker acted at that time from motives of party loyalty and not because he believed in the Bryan programme of free silver. If he should open his heart at the present time, it would be found that he was governed by the same motives—not his belief that Bryan would accomplish anything desirable for the country, but that having been forced upon the party it was his duty to support him. That Judge Parker should see fit to do this after the merciless manner in which he was knifed, stabbed in the back and butchered by the Bryan following all over the country in the last election is creditable to his Christian humility, but not to his personal dignity.

Mr. Cleveland was a broader man than Judge Parker. His motto was not "My party, right or wrong," but "My country before my party." Upon the broadest public grounds he recommended to his fellow citizens to vote for Judge Taft, in whose hands the interests of the republic would be safe. It is difficult to understand how any sincere friend and admirer of Mr. Cleveland can find anything in the present Bryan programme which reminds him of the Cleveland policies. It is difficult even to understand how any personal friend of Mr. Cleveland can vote the Bryan ticket without feeling that he is insulting the memory of the dead ex-president. At the Democratic national convention of 1896, when Mr. Cleveland had been making a heroic stand for the public credit, a resolution of endorsement of his administration, though couched in the most general terms, was voted down, 564 to 357, by those who were bent upon the nomination of Bryan. Bryan and his followers would not at that time even commend the honesty, fidelity and courage of a Democratic president.

As the convention of this year approached, with the bells hardly silent which tolled the funeral dirge of the ex-president, some resolutions were prepared by Judge Parker, commending the administration of Mr. Cleveland, including his efforts to support the public credit. Inevitably a resolution of this sort was like a red rag to a bull when it flashed across the eyes of the advocates of free silver and free paper. The matter of endorsing Mr. Cleveland was taken out of the hands of Judge Parker and of the sound money men of the east and a colorless set of resolutions prepared which might as well have been passed in memory of Polk or Buchanan.

The true friends of Mr. Cleveland, who stood shoulder to shoulder with him through the whirlwind of calumny showered upon him by Bryan and his followers, are likely to find little sign of a change of heart in the present attitude of the Bryan party toward the last Democratic administration. This is significant, beyond the question of persons, because it goes to show that Mr. Bryan is not ready to openly recant any of his fallacies in regard to the monetary system and the national credit. Upon every ground of public duty as well as self respect the true friends of Mr. Cleveland, whether they call themselves Democrats or simply independent and patriotic citizens, are more likely to cast their votes for a candidate who represents their sound money principles than to lie down with the lamblike innocence of Judge Parker with the lion of free silver and free greenbacks at the risk of being devoured.

With the Toast and Tea

GOOD EVENING.

An obstinate man does not hold opinions, but they hold him; for when he is once possessed with an error, it is like a devil, only cast out with great difficulty.

BISHOP BUTLER.

WHEN IRENE SINGS.

When Irene sings, for many a mile The feathered flocks forsake the skies, And, stooping earthwards, for a while Hush all their limpid harmonies And lightly borne on lissome wings, Listen and love, when Irene sings.

When Irene sings, the river stays Her own inimitable song, And loiters down the watery ways And lurks and lists the ferns among, And lifts the myriad murmurings Of her long march, when Irene sings.

When Irene sings, the glad gales hush Their fearsome shrilling o'er the floods; No more they harp on fern and bush, No more they whisper thru the woods, Idle and mute their fringed strings In branch, and brake when Irene sings.

When Irene sings, earth's every tongue Is dumb before her sweeter skill But there be goodly songs unsung And music lingers in a thrill; Wherefore it is my dull heart rings Most musical, when Irene sings. P. M. TENNE.

It is all right to love your neighbor as yourself, but it is dangerous to extend the same feeling to your neighbor's wife. "Time and tide wait for no man," and tide waits for no woman, but there are lots of girls who are "just 19" for a decade.

From the appearance of some Coos Bay women I am led to believe that instead of a dressmaker they have been in the hands of an upholsterer.

There are some Coos Bay women so skillful with the needle that they can make over a dress so that their husbands won't recognize it, but there are none who can so deceive another woman.

"The open-work waist," according to a late fashion journal, "will be in our midst again this autumn." Well, they do wear 'em pretty near that low, don't they?"

When a woman announces in an embarrassed way that she has a confession to make you may know that it is nothing more important than the burning of the roast, or the loss of a dollar. They seldom say anything about bigger things.

LITTLE SON DIES.

John Hickam and Wife Lose Child at Camas Valley.

C. E. Cleghorn got word by telephone from Camas Valley that the year-old son of his cousin, John Hickam, and wife had died at the point named from the illness contracted before reaching Roseburg. This furnished a very pathetic incident in the travels of Mr. and Mrs. Hickam and the latter's parents, Tex Robison and wife, who are returning from a two months' visit to the old home in central Missouri.—Coquille Sentinel.

STRENGTH

In a bank lies, first, in the ability and experience of its officers, "The men behind the gun;" second, its board of directors who advise with and direct the officers; and third, the Capital. LIBERALITY—In a bank is its willingness to furnish funds to depositors to assist them in carrying on their legitimate business. Our motto is, "STRONG AND LIBERAL"—Look us up and if you find us deserving, give us your business.
