WOOD PULP FROM WASTE

Experts Say It May Be Possible to Use Mill Slabs and Sawdust.

A Forestry Service bulletin just issued says:
To insure a pulp-wood supply to meet adequately the future needs of the country seems one of the most important of the many forest problems of the United States. Statistics collected by government experts, however, show that there are possibilities in the field of invention for the relief of the drain on the country's remaining pulpwood forests by devising means of utilizing sawmill waste.

It is estimated that there are four and a half million cords of slabs destroyed in refuse burners of the lumber mills of the country each year. The wood used for pulp last year amounted to approximately four million cords, about a quarter of which had to be imported. The mill-waste estimate is based on a recent canvass of some of the larger mills of the country by the United States Forest Service, which established the interesting fact that mills having an aggregate cut of 5440 million board feet had a final waste of 1,870,000 cords of slabs after the best had been used for lath. Assuming these mills to be representative, it is seen that there is still considerable waste in forest products at the mill, even after the earnest efforts of lumbermen during the last ten years to bring about a closer utilization of the whole tree.

Those figures make it look as if American inventors, who are performing wonderful feats in other fields, should get down to the consideration of methods to make these waste slabs available for the pulp makers. Work along this line would also be likely to show the way for utilization of thousands of tons of sawdust, which are now wasted each year.

It is true that some utilization is being made of mill waste at present, but in most cases it is only the larger and more modern plants that are even making any attempts in this line. Then, as it is, the plants which use the waste slabs, after laths are made, often waste the sawdust, and those which use the sawdust waste the slabs. The slab residue from the lumber cut of the country is estimated to amount to about 15 million cords, of which about six million, with an average value of $1.40 a cord, is sold for fuel, three and a half million burned by the mills for fuel, and four and a half million sent to the refuse burners. This last figure shows the enormous quantity of forest product that is pure waste.

The iron furnace slag heaps have been seized upon by the brick-maker, and the screening dump of the coal mines has become a valuable source of raw material for the briquette manufacturer. Experts say that it may prove possible to make just as good use of the waste heaps of the lumber mills if slabs and sawdust can be converted into pulp.
