The Steamer Caramel came in from San Francisco yesterday bringing the water pipe to be used in connecting the Porter Mill with the North Bend salt water fire mains.

The Redondo brought some rolling stock for the camp of Vaughan and McDonald on Daniel's Creek, which will be used for the construction of their logging railway.

Capt. Robert Dunham, who grew to manhood on Coos Bay and who has friends and relatives here will be pleased to hear of his complete recovery from his serious attack of typhoid fever in Portland. He will make the next trip on the Ronanoke, of which he has been captain for some time.

WAYS WEALTH IS DISTRIBUTED.

Chief Statistician of Census Bureau Writes on "The Assets of the United States."
The nation's wealth is not in the hands of a few, according to L. G. Powers, chief statistician of the census bureau at Washington.

Writing on "The Assets of the United States" in the September number of the American Journal of Sociology, issued recently from the University of Chicago press, Mr. Powers has the following to say of the concentration of wealth in America:
"If we start with the value of farms and other homes which are known to be owned by men of small possessions, the savings bank deposits and other known possessions of these of moderate means, and then add the lowest popular estimates of the possessions of our millionaires, we have an aggregate far in excess of the census appraisal of national wealth, and the conclusion under such circumstances is irresistible either that the census estimates are ridiculously small or the popular estimates of the wealth of our millionaires are greatly exaggerated."

"The writer does not find any evidence that would justify either the statement that our national wealth is grossly understated or that our millionaires own so large a share of that wealth as to leave the great majority without property."
