

LIQUOR CASE AFFECTS CITY

OREGON SUPREME COURT DECISION AGAINST PROHIBITION IN MEDFORD CASE SAID TO APPLY TO MARSHFIELD.

SALEM, Ore., Oct. 30.—Anti-prohibitionists won a great victory in the Oregon Supreme Court when the decree of Judge H. K. Hanna, of Jacksonville, enjoining the county court of Jackson county from making an order declaring the entire county "dry" was affirmed. The order of the county court was based on a provision of the local option law enacting prohibition in an entire county where the majority of votes cast was in favor of prohibition, regardless of whether any incorporated town or city within such county might have voted against prohibition. Jackson county as a whole voted in favor of prohibition last June, but the city of Medford did not. The city brought an injunction suit against the county court on the ground that the Medford charter provided that the city had the right to license the sale of liquor and was, therefore, not amenable to the local option law. Judge Hanna decided that the prohibition order of the county court was void so far as the city of Medford was concerned, and this contention is upheld by the Supreme Court on an appeal from Hanna's decision.

The opinion of the Supreme Court which is written by Justice Moore, means that any incorporated city in Oregon may, by a special election, amend its charter exempting it from the operation of local option laws, so that residents outside the town cannot vote it "dry."

It is claimed that the Marshfield city charter was amended by the Oregon legislature a few years ago making it almost identical with the Medford charter which the Oregon supreme court has just sustained.
